PREFACE

The compilation of this dictionary, from all available and existing published Oirat-Kalmyk written sources, occupied me from June, 1966 to May, 1975, and produced a base of 32,151 computerized data cards with 61,812 definitions plus much other information. In 1976 and 1977 I began the final revision and re-typing intended to produce a preliminary citation dictionary (projected at 900 pages), which would list occurrences of every word keyed to a location in a known text or glossary. My goal was to summarize the known research and scholarship to the present day in a handbook which could then be used to read Oirat texts that remain unstudied, and thus ultimately (in perhaps ten more years, I estimated) produce a relatively complete Oirat dictionary to most extant Oirat documents. The present dictionary thus will be the first half of this two-part scheme.

At present I have been able to complete typing only the first portion, the vowels, amounting to 204 pages, and because I have now taken on some major responsibilities in other academic commitments, to last several years, it seemed unwise to let the work accomplished to date wait until the entire typing would be completed. Consequently, I have decided to issue this first part, and when I am able, to continue with two or three further parts of several hundred pages each. This has its good points and bad points. I would like, for example, to explain the history and development of my project, and to evaluate the various works used as sources, to justify what I have included and to explain why I did the things I did. This commentary will come later, in a postface.

Relative to the use of this dictionary, I call attention here to its most unique feature. The sources of entries are indicated under column headings termed TEXT or GLOSSARY. The text sources are connected discourse, whether manuscript, printed, edited, transcribed. The glossary sources are all listings, dictionaries, citations in grammars or articles, etc. The left-hand text entries should generally be held superior to right-hand glossary entries.

Obviously the previous dictionaries contained spurious and unfounded entries not yet verified in texts. However, it should be made clear that this division here into type according to source did not occur to me until much compilation had been done; as a result, it will prove possible later to shift many entries (especially for words of frequent occurrence) from glossary column to text column.

The entire work of the dictionary has, essentially, been performed by myself, hence its errors are completely my own. Naturally, I also had assistance from various persons and sources, and here I can list them only briefly. First I must thank my long-time mentor, Professor N. Poppe, with whom this idea was worked out, and with whom I first read many of the texts cited here. In particular, I acknowledge his help in reviewing about 6,000 entries from Pozdneyev's Kalmyk-Russian Dictionary, where it was difficult to determine meanings of Russian definitions out of context. Second, I have to thank my assistant (for several years), Dr. Stephen A. Halković, jr., with whom I also read many texts, and who performed an immense amount of low-grade labor that demanded high-grade ability, such as spending the entire summer of 1970 checking about 10,000 entries in Written Mongolian against Kowalewski, Lessing and elsewhere, plus many other duties. Third, I received a number of grants and other funding from Indiana University, the Fulbright-Hayes fellowship, the ACLS, and from my sabbatical leaves, for which I give thanks, and leave a more detailed account for a later writing. I may also mention labor performed by Mrs. Robert (Irmin) Atkinson, who wrote out by hand a 400-page transcription of Zwick's dictionary, to aid my work.

I cannot here go into all the principles underlying my choices as much as I will later, but one policy has been that when an editor of a text has transcribed that text into Latin letters, or has reprinted it in Oirat type, I accept his readings as correct (except for some extremely bad cases). In other words, when the editor has improved a bad form of the text into a known word, I don't stubbornly insist on listing the original or impossible word as the one occurring. -- The routine addition of the -tu, -tai, -tei, -toi suffix does not produce a new entry, in every case. Forms in -ši ügei, or the verb stem noun in -l, both of which are freely made from any base, are not given as new entries. Proper names, as "Manuhari", are not given, but if they are translations (calques), as gerel sakiqci (Kašyapa) they are given. Derived forms, as the pronouns, forms in -ki, and words like bolböci, bögötölö are not listed.

My transcription of letters tries to be almost slavishly exact: if the text writes ū even if it should be ö, then ū is what I write. In the case of some of the edited texts, I have re-read them from the original manuscripts, and sometimes felt it necessary to over-rule the editor's transcription. At a later time, each source work will be evaluated in this respect.

There is much more I would like to say, and when the next parts are issued, perhaps in a couple of years, I may be able to expand these remarks. I might mention that because all of my work was from the outset fully automated by computer operation, I had the advantage of instant high-speed printing and sorting, as each new batch of entries was added. For my use here, I have also prepared sorts in Classical Mongolian order, a reverse sort (in Oirat order), a forward sort in Oirat order, and a complete English to Oirat listing.

When citing the Written Mongolian equivalent of Oirat forms, my standard has been Lessing's dictionary, with additional references to other sources. However, if a given derived form is not actually listed in just that shape, I do not create it, but give the base and the sign + .

When this first half has been completed, I think the goal of scholars should be to re-read the source texts, trying to add more citations from texts, and removing listings that come from glossaries; until ultimately, we can prove that the residuum of forms is known solely from dictionary citations. Finally, I should like to make it clear (I knew it from the outset, but it became painfully apparent to me after I began this final typing) that Oirat texts on the whole are in a generally bad state---indeed, to the point that I wonder whether it was wise to make a dictionary from them the way they are. Yet, there is no way to re-edit many of them, and unless we begin somewhere by making an Oirat dictionary now, we will never have one. Every work of research is a beginning, and will always be improved and superseded. I shall thus welcome the comments of all users.

JOHN R. KRUEGER.

J

EDITOR'S NOTE. In the currently used transcription, J is written only before I; before other vowels, Z is employed. Since the same letter shape occurs in native script, one might also list JI within the entries for Z.

There are also irregular and facultative variant usages of J/, which renders the j-sound before all vowels.

Q

The letter Q renders a k or g, x or γ in syllable-final position before a consonant, or in word-final position; hence, it can never occur initially. This is its alphabetical position for sorting purposes.

H

H is the final letter of the Oirat alphabet, and its use is restricted to words of foreign origin. No instances of entries beginning with H occurred in the reading materials utilized to date.

This page is included to indicate the alphabetical position of H, and for future expansion.

POSTFACE

General

The student of Oirat and Mongolian may on the whole accept this dictionary at face value and make good use of it as a tool to read texts or to begin research. The Mongolist and Altaist will heed the title, "Materials for a Dictionary", realize that this work is not yet a totally finished product, and know how to evaluate its statements and recognize its limitations. In its present form, this work is a grand collection (a true 'state of the art' book) of all defined information now readily available about the Western Mongolian or Oirat-Kalmyk literary language as written and printed during the period of about 1648 to 1924. To be sure, I hope that it is quite accurate within certain boundaries, and to be of great utility, but it remains an intermediate stage which looks toward final perfection. I strove to survey the entire field, bring it up to date, and create a basic reference work now to enable new research into Oirat-Kalmyk literature, language, history and culture during the period of its flowering.

The entries present the contents of all prior clear-script dictionaries and glossaries, as translated and improved by me, as well as the words occurring in all textual material published by Mongolian, Russian (Soviet) and Western scholars in articles, editions, and books or documents from about the 1850's up to 1975, including many texts edited and translated by me, as well as materials which I had read up to 1975 but never published. Two greater specialists before me also strove in their works to bring together everything known to them, and I have made full use of these works in mine. These were A. N. Pozdneyev in his 1906 Kalmyk-Russian dictionary, and G. J. Ramstedt, in his 1935 Kalmyk-German dictionary. I urge my users, in due time, to consult closely my article about these and other works, "Circularity in Kalmyk Dictionaries" (Mongolia Society Bulletin, vol. 12 for 1975, pp. 52-68)

Period of Work and Publication

I began this work, originally with Prof. N. Poppe (it was however never his intent to be a co-author) in the summer of 1966, reading and analyzing such fundamental collections as Pozdneyev's chrestomathy and Jülg's Siddhi Kür; we again spent the summer of 1971 extending my reading, in particular, of the Janggar epic (in part); and much of my first sabbatical in 1972 was devoted to indexing the contents and entries of Pozdneyev's Kalmyk-Russian dictionary. My entire input, storage and output was from the outset computerized (using 80-column IBM punched cards which are retained here), and after about ten intermediate stages of increasing scope and content, I reached a stopping-point in mid-1975 with 32,150 main entries and over 61,000 definitions, probably representing some ten to twelve thousand headwords. Each entry is carefully marked for its exact point or origin by document, page and even line, for quick verification by others where accessible.

During 1976 and my second sabbatical of 1977, I was able to re-group, edit and (personally) type Part One, pages 1-204, covering the Vowels, from 7350 lines of computer print-out. Part Two, pages 205-464 gives the first section of Consonants, and was made from 11,300 lines of computer print-out, requiring an intensive period from December 1st, 1983 to February 1st, 1984, to edit and type. It appeared in early March, 1984. Part Three gives the concluding section of Consonants, and was re-typed from about 13,500 lines of print-out, pages 465-786 and appears here-with (May, 1984). It was typed during a period of intensive work from February 1st to April 1st, 1984. These divisions, by the way, correspond to the volume break-down also employed in the dictionaries by Kowalewski and Golstunskii.

Structure of the Entry

The most unusual feature of this Dictionary is its bipartite division into Text Sources and Glossary Sources, which I have discussed in the prefatory pages to Part One. These are physically balanced in the alphabetical order, so that right-hand entries are at the same eye-level as the left-hand entries to which they are subordinate. The content of the entries likewise has a dual nature, in that I present on the one hand my definitions of words from texts I have studied, and on the other I report the definitions by others from their edited texts or compiled glossaries, translating into English where needed. Hence the user is himself able to evaluate the source and accuracy of the entry from several points of view.

The headword is given in italic type, followed by English definitions in regular type (in a very few cases, italic type was used for foreign words employed in the definitions). To make distinctions between nouns and verbs clearer for all users, I always use "to" with verbs, and sometimes "a" or "the" with nouns (not "break", but "a break; to break"; "general" = common, ordinary, but "a general", as title). In a few cases where entries were defined as function words like "and, or, but", I placed those in quotation marks to show that the entry itself meant "and". Synonyms are separated by commas; and when meanings extend or change, semi-colons are used. Next follow directly abbreviations for sources, usually several capital letters, as ZN, DC, or four and five-letter short forms (Debis, Manu, John), with numbers denoting page, column, entry, sub-entry, etc. Next, the mark // separates the main entry from a reference to equivalents or parallel forms in Literary Mongolian (abbreviated Mo.), or to etymological information for words from Russian, Tibetan, or to spoken forms as listed in RK/b, Ramstedt's Kalmyk-German dictionary. Occasionally there is a minor misplacement of sequence, as placing the source abbreviation after the // entry, but these are of little serious result.

Transcription and Entries

As stated in the preface to Part One, I have tried to adopt a rather slavish approach to transcription, instead of an interpretative one (what it 'ought' to be), because the Oirat script makes it possible to distinguish almost all combinations and sequences. Unless I give every word exactly as originally written, there is no consistent rule which enables one to "improve" one entry while leaving another unchanged.

For example, if a text writes kündöi 'heavy, serious', I "know" that köndöi is intended, but I will not make this change. A few headword entries also serve as suggestions for textual improvements, especially in some printed-script materials, e.g., möggün is just a printing error for mönggün --but a student or other user may not know this or chance to think of it, and can be aided to develop skills of emendation.

Etymologies

After the mark // I make some suggestions for Literary Mongolian equivalents or parallels, but I do not propose these as immutable conclusions, especially as it is often a question of additional or differing suffixes or some other change in formation. (The sign "+" in particular does not always mean 'plus', but 'note differing formation'. Further, where several entries of closely similar spelling from a single base are grouped together as single-spaced paragraphs, I do not in every case keep repeating the same equivalence. However, if a similar entry occurs again a few lines away, I generally do give the material after // again, because a user might have turned directly to that entry and not discover that a similar item occurred a few lines away. To conserve space, these are sometimes placed at a point where a half-line of space was free.

Translating and Editing Problems

In the "Glossary Sources" column, the user should bear in mind that these entries are almost always mere listings in the original books, rather than given with full context (as is often the case for Pozdneyev's dictionary). In the process of translating these from German or Russian, errors may occur in the semantic uses of a word, or in the synonyms selected. In this column, then, I am presenting what others have said a word means, even if imprecise or wrong, further shaded by my choice of equivalent definitions or even a mis-translation. To give a simple example, "to lie" might mean to tell a lie, or to lie down; or Mongolian words like xara or sain could be translated by dozens of English words depending on the original context.

In the "Text Sources" column there are two kinds of reporting: words found in texts read or edited by me (many of these were originally joint projects studied by N. Poppe and myself, and later published), whether yet printed or not, and words from texts read and edited by other parties. I do not try to evade responsibility for my errors by pointing out that some definitions thus report what others have said, and some report what I have concluded, right or wrong. In general, I tried not to re-edit a text, in the sense of re-studying the manuscript and over-ruling the printed versions, but many times I did secure the original or a copy and use it. I refer the user to my remarks about each source in the section on Evaluation of Sources, where I sometimes give explanation applicable to each case. Definitions given in quotation marks, as "to zoom", are intended to alert users to non-standard English usage of colloquial speech, or slang which seemed to suit the context nicely or with flair.

Format Questions

Identical entries are balanced, or nearly so, on left and right, but I do not repeat the head-word on the right-hand side (except at the very first line of a page), using instead the arrow --->. Once in a while, an entry is half a space above or below where it should be; use a straight-edge ruler to clarify exactly which line goes with which line---these are few.

Successive entries are separated by half a space, but if a number of entries group into a sub-set or family of words, single-spacing is used. Occasionally, a headword was omitted or dropped, and then discovered in re-checking. Where possible, I put these in on the proper page, even at the expense of crowding; sometimes arrows or hand-drawn lines were used. I dislike the appearance, but preferred it to transferring the information to an errata page where it might be overlooked.

Line over-flow occurs when blank space above or below permits a word or a few letters to be placed just above or below the main entry. This procedure, which I began for parts II and III, permitted closer entries, i.e., more items per page. It resulted in a general reduction of about twenty percent, which saved about a hundred pages of printing, and hundreds of dollars in production costs. Thus parts II and III have a denser appearance, as items are less separated.

Error Possibilities

Naturally, I hope that the Dictionary is as accurate as I can make it at present, but I do not exclude the possibility of errors both by me and by my sources, as well as that other scholars may make differing interpretations or conclusions from the same material. Therefore, I mention here certain types of mistakes, which even if involving 100, 200 or 300 entries, would amount to less than one percent of the 30,000 sorted cards.

In some cases, it is not easy to decide what the exact stem of a noun or verb is when it occurs with grammatical endings. The removal of a genitive, reflexive or other ending from a noun or verb may result in minute discrepancies. For instance, words of the type xoroxoi 'insect' will have a genitive xoroxoiyin or xoroxoyiyin. The form to be restored as nominative and headword entry, is best given as xoroxoi, rather than xoroxoyi. In good Girat usage, the accusative of an n-stem has no -n ending, hence, kümün 'man', but kümü 'man (acc.)'. Similarly, removal of a reflexive ending may depend on how one interprets the sentence, and whether one person thinks the word even has a reflexive ending or not. I further alert users to be cautious in accepting my translations of transitive/intransitive, or causative/passive listings, deriving from Russian aspects or reflexives. In the absence of sufficient context to determine usage, English can be very ambiguous, and I feel there is an area there where errors may have occurred.

Length

Because all intermediate sortings of the many preparation stages were prepared by computer, this created a minor technical problem for words containing long vowels. At one point, it was necessary to have all short-vowel words in one place, and all long-vowel words in another; at another point, it was more useful to have them interfiled (in the manner of Clauson's Turkic etymological dictionary), because it better put together what belonged together. During the editing and re-typing, I have striven to group together connected units, even if minute mis-orderings took place thereby.

First come nouns with short vowel, then nouns with long vowel; next, verbs with short vowel, then verbs with long vowel, e.g., xor, x̄or, xor-, x̄or-. This is fine and clear, but the problem lies in the texts themselves, where there resides much error and confusion in long and short; hence, if a word which is normally short also has some sporadic occurrences with length, I often put those into the right entry, instead of isolated. The practical suggestion, indeed one to be used at all times, is to have all users scan above and below the head entries for allied words with slight variations.

Errors in Column Placement

During the long process of editing and re-typing I occasionally made errors in placement for words from some sources having few entries. Thus, CAJ 7 is a text source, but CAJ 3 is a glossary source; AOH 17 is a text, but all other AOH entries are glossaries. My best guess is that there are a dozen or two such mis-placements which further checking did not reveal. I also mention certain works in the Evaluation of Sources which were particularly subject to this slip.

Procedural Suggestion

My best general suggestion for Dictionary users is to become familiar at once with the chief abbreviations for sources, and to read, even if briefly, the section on Evaluation of Sources. Then the user will know the most frequent letters and combinations, as M, Debis, ZW, RKWb, Manu and others, and can recognize that certain are very reliable, and others very dubious.

Additional Aids

For my own use during intermediate stages, I had the computer also prepare sorts on the classical Mongolian entries (forwards and backwards), a complete Qirat-order backwards listing, and a complete English-to-Qirat listing. Each of these fulfilled its purpose by immediately revealing various errors in typing and transcription which had escaped previous checks. These aids are not really worthy of reproduction, but can still be utilized in their rough and partly inaccurate form, and at times might lighten long searches. In particular, the English sort is very cumbersome, being over a thousand pages of continuous print-out with no separations. I keep these at hand (they will later become the property of the Research Institute for Inner Asian Studies at Indiana University), and I would have no objection to answering an occasional inquiry or request for their use, within these limitations.

Future Tasks

I do hope that I have not omitted any pre-1975 work relating to Oirat studies, of significance, because in the ten-year period of 1966 to 1975 I secured copies of everything of importance. If there remain some items so obscure that they are known to almost no one, then they are equally inaccessible to all, and cannot play a great role. Thus, it was never my purpose to bring this Dictionary up to the very last minute in 1984, and to treat with care everything which appeared since I ceased my input in 1975. Instead, I expended more energy to create a broad pre-1975 base of all past work; it will be no problem to discover now all the things printed from 1975 to 1985, for later addition.

Permit me to refer the serious user again to a work of my own, my article in Mongolian Studies (vol. 2, 1975, pages 93-113), "Written Oirat and Kalmyk Studies", where I indicated briefly some tasks for the future, such as the two-volume work on Oirat medical tractate, the Oirat üliger-ün dalai, additional work in the Kalmyk translation of the Bible, the Zaya Pandita biography, and others. The single most vital work to appear since 1975 is of course Kh. Luv anbaldan's impressive volume, Tod üsgiin dursgaluud ("Monuments of the Clear Script"), Corpus Scriptorum Mongolorum, vol. 19, fasc. 14, 434 pages, which I received from him personally in Ulan Bator in 1976. It deserves much attention, and will prove most valuable; I deeply regret I could incorporate no information from it; hence, I call particular attention to it here and now.

In the many small articles I have written which transcribe, edit and translate texts or documents, I now find many places where improvements are needed. It is my fond wish, in some future decade, to re-issue these as a volume of my collected Oiratica, and at that time to make all those corrections and improvements. By here publicly stating my intent, I hope to bind myself to this future commitment at a later time.

May Day, 1984

5. Gy. Kara, "Le colophon de l'Altan Gerel Oirat", in Acta Orientalia (Hung.) 10.255-261, 1960.

A detailed discussion of the problems encountered in coping with Haenisch's transcribed edition and the Copenhagen manuscript has been given in our article cited as entry 4 above, and the earnest reader must consult that closely for explanations of decision and usage. Basically, I have "restored" his style of transcription to accord with my own standard, while keeping his readings instead of reverting to the manuscript, not accessible readily. In general, to understand this Altan Gerel, it would require more work with other Mongolian AG's, with which it shares much phraseology, as well as AG editions in other languages (those of J. Nobel and Emmerick in particular).

There is a frequent use of üiled- 'to perform' used as an auxiliary to almost every verb, e.g., 'performed saying', instead of just 'said'. The postposed demonstrative, as dsagasun tere 'this fish', and even of pronouns, as zān töüni 'that elephant (acc.)', seem to be in imitation of Tibetan usage. The whole text is generally awkward and stilted in expression, making it hard to understand. What is really required is a full-scale treatment of Kalmyk and Mongolian versions with reference to Chinese, Sanskrit, etc., parallels, which I cannot do at present. I have drawn about 433 words for the Dictionary, but did not include Sanskrit formulas or the translated names, though some individual names of flowers and medicines are.

This is Lórinicz's carefully transcribed edition of some Siddhitü Kegür stories in Girat; the text in general is quite like that of earlier stories, with a few puzzling words or phrases. Since all the words from the main SK stories of Jülg were listed at the outset of my compilation, few new entries or duplications were made here.

This small tale, one of the very first I read, is taken from the handwritten copybook of B. Laufer (see JAOS 86.178, 1966), in its Dresden title, tüb oroni tusa büteqsen xān küböün; it follows its original (Eb 405-a,2 exactly (see Heissig, Verzeichniss, 156). Although I called this a provisional translation, it becomes a final version since there are no other copies. I have improved my work and hope to re-print it as corrected in a later collection.

In some earlier privately-circulated dictionary stages, I used the abbreviation TO (tüb oroni) for this work.

This is a highly interesting work, representing as it does, one of our very few indigenous sources on travel, a kind of "worm's eye view" of Tibet. In the absence of the original manuscript (Kh. At present, I have read only pages 5-33 or so, in comparison with some Geser versions in Mongolian. This particular text has one very strange aspect; it gives many ordinary words with a long vowel, e.g., yazār, when they are never so written elsewhere. This creates all kinds of false impressions if these forms are added to a standard dictionary. This work should be made the basis of further study.

J Janggar 1850 entries

Text of the Janggar epic as taken from pages 93-169 of the Pozd-neyev Chrestomathy; one of the most important sources. This text presents a problem in the use of the so-called echo words, or "epic adjectives", many of which seem to be used for their phonic effect, or alliterative value, and to suggest qualities. As a result, it can be very difficult to translate them, although they are often given meanings in RKB. The reader should also be aware of the issue of "circularity" referred to earlier, i.e., that 3 or 4 citations for a Janggar word all stem from the same passage.

John Gospel of John

1878. This version is the 1820 edition ascribed to I. J. Schmidt, as re-edited in 1878, and listed in the British Museum Catalogue of Printed books (London, 1964), vol. 215, page 353-b, item 6; very small format, print hard to read. I have read as sample chapters 1-6 on pages 1-36, for about 80 entries.

KZP Kalmytskie zagadki i poslovitsy Riddles: 310 entries
(Perhaps a few errors as KPZ, too) Proverbs: 320 entries

Vl. Kotwicz, Калмыцкія загадки и пословицы, St.PBg, 1905, 110 pp. Quite a good and useful source in general; the texts are fond of short-form verbs, e.g, ir for ire-, and or for oro-; similarly, there is frequent use of nouns in Vowel instead of Vowel + -N, as cusu for cusun. Very many of these are cited by Pozdneyev and by Ramstedt, both using the page numbers, whereas I cite to the number of the Riddle or Proverb itself. In Archer Taylor's large book on Mongolian Riddles, there is a complete translation of the riddle section, but containing bad mis-translations (made by Lessing or his co-workers) who used the Russian while claiming they used the Mongolian. I corrected many of these in a small article in Folklore Forum (vol. 8, no. 1, 1975, pp. 354-356).

The work has been re-published in Elista in 1972, with the clear script replaced by Kalmyk-Cyrillic, including the errors of the original, e.g., note the wrong division on p. 21, no. 35; and reading on p. 89, no. 288, прекращается which makes no sense, instead of превращается, which suits admirably.

LE 8 Literaturnaya Entsiklopediya, vol. 8 15 entries

S.v. Ойратская литература , the 8th volume of the Russian reference work, Литературная Энциклопедия , pp. 264-265, has an illustration of a plate from the Siddhitü Kegür tale. It is disclosed to be from the 17th tale, but does not match with any of the version in AOH 17 or in SK.

L Lessing

Refers to F. D. Lessing and others, Mongolian-English Dictionary, Berkeley, 1960 (and reprints), to establish a standard for citation of Literary Mongolian forms. Where the abbreviation "Mo." is used, it means the form can be found in Lessing at the proper place; where L. plus a page number is given, the form is in one of the appendixes on the page given.

M medētei 375 entries.

Entries under this abbreviation are from the Oirat text of the üliger-ün dalai, called Medetei in Oirat. This was a most valuable addition to the dictionary, but owing to its size, and the amount of time then available, I had to restrict my selections to those chapters which I had already carefully studied in Literary Mongolian, viz., Nos. 1, 2, 3, 24 and 34. The source text is the Dresden manuscript Eb 404-c, in the Heissig Verzeichnis, No. 285, a complete bound photocopy in my possession. I must observe that the original has red and black ink, and that this has reproduced poorly in my copy; hence, I would feel better to consult the original at times.

In my opinion, it is clear that this is an independent translation from the Tibetan, as it does not give complete parallels to such Mongolian versions as the standard 1714 xylograph, which I also own (see Heissig, Verzeichnis, No. 283). Further, it does not match the version published by Rinčen in the Corpus Scriptorum Mongolorum, vol. 16, fasc. 2 (Ulan Bator, 1970; 120 pages, four folios to a page). This text, I must emphasize, is over-reduced for those who want to see every diacritic for ö and for the udaan (length-mark), though one can read it for the sense easily enough.

Further utilization of this important text, with aid from all existing versions, will be most useful to extend coverage of the Oirat lexicon. I call attention further to the new English translation, from the Mongolian, by Dr. Stanley N. Frye, Sutra of the Wise and the Foolish, Dharamsala (India), 1981, 245 pages.

Manu Manuhari 475 entries

(earlier
MH)

The story of Manuhari (Skt. Manoharā), first read from the Laufer notebook copy using the Dresden manuscript (Eb 404-h, cf. Heissig, Verzeichnis, 149), has been compared with the Göttingen manuscript (Asch 110, Heissig, Verz. 148), denoted as Manu-G in this dictionary. An English translation, along with a fine illustration from the Göttingen manuscript, appeared in the Indiana University K'uei Hsing (A Repository of Asian Literature in Translation), Bloomington, 1974, pages 137-166, "The Manuhari Jātaka-Tale".

It has been called both a jataka and an avadana, and although I stated it had not previously been translated into English, I have since found a version in "Tibetan Tales derived from Indian Sources...", translated by F. Anton von Schiefner and W. R. S. Ralston (London, no date), Chapter V, pp. 44-74; see further L. A. Waddell, Buddhism of Tibet, p. 552; and Michael Walter, Note on an Oirat Jataka, Mongolian Studies, vol. 2, 1975, pp. 141-142.

This was one of the very first items which I used for starting the dictionary; hence it contains many basic and important words in their first occurrence.

MOZ Mongolo-Oiratskie zakony 465 entries

K. Th. Golstunskii, Монголо-ойратские законы 1640 года ..., St. Pbg, 1880.

The Oirat text occupies pages 1-33. Elsewhere, in my article on the Jinjil Decrees (CAJ 16, 1972, pp. 194-205) I discussed that two versions of Golstunskii's Russian text exist, but there is no change in the Oirat copy. Pozdneyev has incorporated portions of the MOZ into his Chrestomathy (his pp. 76-88 are about half of the MOZ). This cannot be used to improve Golstunskii, however; as a result I cited only directly from the MOZ. I have never been able to learn anything about the manuscript used by Golstunskii, but I consider a new treatment of this text to be a high desideratum. In the absence of any new material, it seems to be unlikely. The contents of these laws are of greatest interest for social-science study of institutions, legal affairs and society.

NP N. Poppe

"NP" refers to both oral and written material from N. Poppe about Oirat texts and glossaries. In the course of corrections to my notes on Pozdneyev's dictionary and others, I sometimes give additional entries based on his statements, which tend to be prescriptive however.

ONLM Obraztsy narodnoi literatury Mongolov 250 entries

A. M. Pozdneyev, Образцы народной литературы монгольских племен, St. PBg, 1880, 347 pages.

A collection with translation of materials collected during his first travels in Mongolia. The texts cited are all put into the first pages as a kind of supplement, pp. 1-43, and in the final pages after p. 320. He takes care always to give clear-script items in Oirat letters. My subjective feeling about these texts is that they are early efforts of Pozdneyev, and not as reliable as regards Oirat spelling, i.e., he did not yet know what he later learned more about.

(PC) Pozdneyev Chrestomathy, editions 1-2-3

A. M. Pozdneyev, Калмыцкая хрестоматія для чтенія въ старшихъ классахъ калмыцкихъ народныхъ школъ, St. PBg, first edition, 1892, 172 pages; 2nd ed., 1907, 195 pages; 3rd ed., 1915, 196 pages.

I have discussed these editions at length in my supplementary bibliography of Pozdneyev's writings, vol. II of my edition of his 1892-3 diaries of travel, Mongolia and the Mongols, pp 369-370 there. This work has formed a cornerstone of the selections used for the Dictionary, as it did for Pozdneyev himself, who incorporated all of its words into his own dictionary. I have not been able to go behind his texts and secure access to manuscripts used by him, and presuming that readers likewise can photocopy his book rather than his manuscripts, have centered my citations on his pagination as printed.

Next I cite a break-down of the contents, in which each selection has a code-set of its own, giving the pages according to the second edition pagination as the most accessible for use. Refer back to each source section individually.

9.		Zaya Pandita's History of Kalmyk Literature	169-172
10.	TC	Tonilxu čimeq	173-195

The selection on Kalmyk literature is rather misleading in title. It really is a list of the 177 works of Zaya Pandita as taken from his biography by Ratnabhadra. (I have elsewhere dealt with the Master's thesis of Mr. Halkovic, which lists six versions of this item.) Thus as it consists only of titles, it was not feasible to include it in the dictionary.

RG Russkoye gosudarstvo 180 entries

From the Pozdneyev Chrestomathy, his selections 3-4-5 are placed under a single heading. These are translations into Kalmyk from a series of Russian booklets about the empire, prepared by the Ministry of Education, giving simple social and geographical facts. As such they are excellently suited to the beginner, almost childishly simple at times. The second and third have occasional passages not clear to me. Do remember, these are not Kalmyk originals, hence their value for the dictionary is secondary. As may be expected, quite a few Russian words and place-names occur in these selections.

SK Siddhitü Kegür 1800 entries

1. B. Jülg, Die Märchen des Siddhi-kür; Kalmükischer Text mit deutscher Übersetzung und einem kalmükisch-deutschen Wörterbuch (Leipzig, 1866), 233 pages. His pages 3-48 give the printed text made the basis of this study, and of the following entry re-printing it in part.
2. John A. Krueger, "Thirteen Kalmyk-Oirat Tales from the Bewitched Corpse Cycle, Text, Glossary, Translation", Special Papers, Issue Seven, The Mongolia Society, 1978, 119 pages.

My pages 5-50 reproduce Jülg's printed text of his pages 3-48; the glossary is on pages 51-74, and a polished translation on my pages 75-116. The entire work is very suitable for beginners in Oirat studies, especially as many have already read some SK tales in Literary Mongolian; alphabetical tables are also given.

The SK is an extremely important work for the Dictionary, first, because it was the first lengthy work to be read and carded, and as a result, many citations of important words find their first usage in these stories; and second, because it is a major work of literature circulating among the Mongols and Oirat-Kalmyks, though not indigenous.

Subh Subhasita 290 entries

Kh. Luvsanbaldan, Le Subhāṣitaratnanidhi oirate du Zaya Pandita, in Acta Orientalia Hungarica 26 (2-3), pp. 195-225, 1972.

This gives in transcription the 457 quatrains of the Oirat version of the Subhasita, but without translation. By careful reference to the Bosson edition of the Tibetan and Mongolian, I have assumed the meanings for words not otherwise recorded, though not without some discrepancies. On the whole, I feel that the Oirat differs sufficiently from the Mongolian to indicate that it was made directly from the Tibetan; still, there are instances where the Mongolian reading is better than the Oirat.

In Aalto's catalogue of the Hedin collection in the Stockholm Ethnographic Museum, there is another Kalmyk Subhasita (Ms 29.21.140) but protracted correspondence between me, Aalto and them was unable to turn up this copy, which seems to have been mis-laid. Perhaps some colleague on a personal trip to Stockholm can discover it.

TC tonilxu cimeq 150 entries

This text, the Adornment of Salvation, is taken from the Pozdneyev Chrestomathy, pp. 173-195 of the second edition, and a Mongolian parallel may be found in the Kowalewski chrestomathy, II, pp. 99-158; I have discussed these in my 1972 article in Mongolian Studies, vol. 2, pp. 84-95. As it contains many of the most basic terms of Buddhism, it is very important for our purposes.

UXT and AT Ubashi Xung Taiji 410 entries

My primary source is the Laufer notebook, copying the Dresden MS (Eb 404-i) which has since disappeared; see also Heissig Verzeichnis No. 8, in Tübingen, compared with the printed edition in G. Gomboyev's Altan Tobči, in which it forms an appendix. Pozdneyev, however, refers to this printed version as primary, whereas I take the MS as lead.

The text is very colloquial, with many forms drawn from speech, so that it makes a mis-match with literary texts.

1. S. A. Kozin, Ойратская историческая песнь о разгроме халхасского Шолой-убаши хунтайджи в 1587 году, in Sovetskoe Vostokovedenie, vol. 4, pp. 90-104, 1947.

2. Ts. Damdinsüren, Убаши хун тайжийн тууж in a 24-page booklet of 1956, issued by the Mongolian Academy of Sciences, Ulan Bator, no series indicated.

Note again that AT does not mean Altan Tobči, but the UXT version as printed in Gomboyev's edition of Altan Tobči; in the Dictionary, I thus refer to the printed text as opposed to the manuscript, UXT.

Uziüg 5-6 entries

Kh. Luvsanbaldan, Deux syllabaires oïrates, in AOH 25, pp. 209-219, of 1972.

In the course of discussing these two unique syllabaries in Oirat, the author quotes some stanzas and lists a few words not found elsewhere.

Vajr Vajracchedika 75 entries

N. Poppe, The Diamond Sutra, Three Mongolian Versions of the Vajracchedika Prajnaparamita, texts, translations, notes and glossaries. Wiesbaden, Asiatische Forschungen, vol. 35.

His third part, pages 159-217, is devoted to an Oirat version, and is collated from two versions in Germany, Heissig Verzeichnis No. 244, and manuscript No. 8 from Dresden.

VJ Vessantara Jataka 615 entries

N. Poppe, "The Mongolian Versions of the Vessantarajataka", in Studia Orientalia, vol. 30 (2), pp. 92, Helsinki, 1964.

VJ refers to the Asch collection manuscript 113 in Göttingen, or Heissig, Verzeichniss No. 159; VJ-F is the Ramstedt manuscript R-6 in Finland.

As this work was one of the first closely studied by me, it resulted in several hundred entries for the dictionary. I basically used the transcription as edited by N. Poppe, but I have also consulted both manuscripts in photocopy, and in a few cases over-ruled the original editor.

Xong Xongxo 30 to 40 entries

Although ultimately deriving from the Xongxo volumes, I draw these items from:

N. Bassanoff, "Contes populaires kalmouks", in Etudes mongoles, cahier 1, 1970, pp. 81-89, where she transcribes and translates into French, from Xongxo volume 2 (pp. 33-37 top, p. 44-45 top, pp. 41-42) and from Volume 3, p. 37, § 65.

At the present time, I have not chosen to integrate the contents of the three known Xongxo volumes into the dictionary. On the whole, they represent a very colloquial and non-literary style not matching well with the other Oirat literature used up to now. There are undoubtedly items of value to be gleaned later. The contents also have many Krylov fables translated into Kalmyk; I cannot feature these as presenting value. In my possession is a copy of volume II (Czechoslovakia, 1926), and a photocopy of vol. I of 1925 (Courtesy of Dr. Sanji Altan).

Xylo Xylographs in Kalmyk half a dozen

Kh. Luvsanbalдан, "Тод монгол барын номын тухай, ("On Xylographs in Clear Script"), in Studia Mongolica, vol. 6, fasc. 31, 1969, pages 161-172.

An interesting article giving details on the half-dozen works known to have been xylographed; most of these were earlier mentioned in his article coded under Zaya, q.v., and I quote in preference from that article, which seems to have fewer spelling and typing errors.

Zap Zapiski 700 entries

This refers to Pozdneyev's edition of the Калмыцкие сказки as found in the Memoires of the Oriental Division of the Imperial Russian Archeological Society, ZVOIRAO; for the complex history of this publication, see the surmises as given on p. 369 of my Bibliography of Pozdneyev's works, in the appendix to volume II, my edition of Mongolia and the Mongols, Uralic-Altai Series, vol. 69, part II, 1977.

Since, however, no one seems actually to have a copy of the Skazki using the pagination which Pozdneyev cites in his dictionary, and since the ZVOIRAO can be located in libraries, I use that volume, page and line reference according to this scheme. I have no information as to the manuscript sources of these stories.

Kh. Luvsanbaldan, Ойрадын Зая бандидын орчуулгын тухай мэдээ, Khel zoxiol, 1969, vol. 6 (no.6), pp. 83-162.

This article about the Zaya Pandita output extensively cites the colophons, and provides useful words and forms. From my notes of a conversation with the author in Sept, 1970, in Ulan Bator, I learn that of the 177 known works of Zaya Pandita, more than 47 have been found beyond doubt in notes of colophons.

John R. Krueger, "New Materials on Girat Law and History. Part One, the Jinjil Decrees", Central Asiatic Journal, vol. 16 (3), pp.194-205 (1972).

As in content the Jinjil Decrees are a continuation of the MOZ which precede them in Pozdneyev's Chrestomathy, pp. 89-92 q.v., this contributed to their being unrecognized.

ZP Earlier abbreviation for Zinz, see above.

Pages 159-200 have an old, bad translation of the ZPB.

The editor (item 1) gives phototypic reproduction of the Oirat text, as well as a full transcription into Latin letters, but when checking from the transcription back to the original, I cannot justify that version by what I see, but am compelled to adopt the editor's reading. I find the Oirat sense and meaning frequently distorted, and the Literary Mongolian (item 2) seems more often to provide a better form; thus, I interpret the Oirat in the light of the Mongolian. At present, I have read only to about folio 37-b, and frankly, I have found this a hard text; perhaps others will be more successful than I.

The spelling and grammar of these 18 songs and poems are in general not a very high-style classical; instead, words are spelled as they sound, and do not match well with a good literary style. I had the benefit of comments and corrections by the author, who also came to visit here in June, 1981. She died in 1983.

GLOSSARY SOURCES

80 entries

AOH 8 Gy. Kara, "Notes sur les dialectes oïrat de la Mongolie occidentale," in AOH 8, pp. 111-168 (1958).

The majority of the article is devoted to a lengthy glossary of spoken forms and definitions, and a very mechanical listing of the written Oirat equivalents. It is important to know that certain words survive in the spoken language. There are about 1500 entries, but I concentrate here on only those literary forms which I cannot find cited elsewhere. I observe that very many of these also occur in the Golstunskii Dictionary. I had as well the benefit of some later comments and corrections of minor errors from the author.

10-12 entries

AOH 10 Gy. Kara, "Le colophon de l'Altan Gerel oïrat", in AOH 10, pp. 255-261 (1961), see also under my main entry AG. Further, in the same issue, see G. Kara reviewing the Zaya Pandita biography in Mongolian; pp. 310-321.

Although the author is quoting the manuscripts directly, in transcription, since I have not seen them, I classify those few words (a dozen entries) under Glossary Sources for now.

- AOH 18 25 entries
L. Lőrincz, "La terminologie du folklore kalmouck", in AOH 18, pages 149-158 (1965).
The author discusses some words used about music, writing and other cultural areas, citing some Oirat forms.
- AOH 25
Note that AOH 25 is the same as Text Source üziig
All AOH entries are Glossary Sources, save only AOH 17, the SK edition. There are some isolated AOH references with appropriate volume and page, drawn eclectically.
- Badm 700 entries
Naim. Badmayev, Краткий русско-калмыцкий словарь, St. FBg, 1899, 95 pages, Russian to Kalmyk.
A good small dictionary which yielded quite a few words for the present dictionary. There are sufficient cases where a certain form is found only in Pozdneyev and here by which I conclude that Badmayev was a source for Pozdneyev. In those cases where the Kalmyk only explains or translates the Russian, I give only those words which differ in form, rather than all components of the entry as such.
- Bobr 430 entries
Aleksei Bobrovnikov, Грамматика монгольско-калмыцкого языка, Kazan, 1948, 403 pages (of which 401-403 are errata).
A rather curious work, which strives to be a grammar of Classical Mongolian and of Oirat-Kalmyk at the same time. It cites first (on the left the original source, and then transposes the form of the entire quotation into Mongolian or Kalmyk. As a result I am sometimes dubious about his Oirat forms; hence, I advise caution. However, N. Poppe always spoke to me highly about this work, so it must have good features. I see a strong influence from literary Mongolian.
- CAJ 3 40 entries
Udo Posch, "The Syllabic Groups and their further development in the Oirat Written Language," in CAJ 3, pages 206-219, 1958.
This rather strange article is apt to give erroneous impressions. In spite of the author's statements about his research and attainments, the fact is, he had no knowledge of written Oirat at all, and relied far too heavily on the guidance of his mentor, N. Poppe. He looked in various sources for Oirat words and forms and reported these inaccurately. My goal has been to include in my Dictionary only those forms from his article which I could not confirm elsewhere; consequently, when a CAJ 3 form is cited, I feel one should be wary of it.

Note that CAJ 7 is a Text Source.

Although Golstunskii's work is a dictionary of Literary Mongolian, he often gives the Oirat-Kalmyk parallel or equivalent, sometimes marking it Kalm., and sometimes just giving it in Oirat script. It thus can be hard at times to know when an entry refers in whole or part to Kalmyk usage. If an entry is in Oirat script, it is included here; if a Kalmyk-script source is cited, but it is not in Oirat-script, I usually do not include it.

	1. P. Aalto, "Schrift-Oiratisch", pages 185-199.	15 entries
	2. U. Posch, "Das. Kalmükische und verwandte Dialekte,"	18 entries

These two articles, very much like the entry under CAJ 3, suffer from forms which I do not find verified in other glossaries or from texts, and which I surmise rest on minor mis-readings of Oirat-script entries in Zwick and Pozdneyev. Hence I have striven to include as final entries only those spellings not so found in any other source.

Pz	Pozdneyev Dictionary	8,835 entries
	A. M. Pozdneyev, Калмыцко-русский словарь ..., St. PBg 1911,	306 pages.

This is an important work, which I have studied closely, and reported elsewhere on its sources. Although Pozdneyev states his work is an extract of a much vaster work, I remain dubious, and consider it in effect to be his glossary to known texts of the times, and to the works he edited (see my article, Circularity in Kalmyk Dictionaries, MSB 12, pp. 52-68, 1975). Virtually the entire dictionary has been translated and incorporated into the present work. In addition, I have traced back in all possible cases his citations to the originals, making corrections. He heavily normalized his citations, e.g., words on the order of üzöül- are converted to üzüül-. He gives very many illustrative sentences and phrases, and I have treated these as sources, making their words into new entries--sometimes also creating discrepancies.

To cover the fact that the Russian definitions out of context can be ambiguous, I called on N. Poppe to review my computer print-outs, scanning for meanings not reflecting the Oirat word meaning. He made other corrections, for which I thank him, and mark those as "NP". Nonetheless, I feel some of those do not reflect text usage. My deep thanks to him for this assistance again.

RKS See now Smir (Smirnov).

RKWb Ramstedt Kalmückisches Wörterbuch

Gustav J. Ramstedt, Kalmückisches Wörterbuch, Helsinki, 1935, 30 + 560pages.

I reiterate my deep admiration for this work, and again refer the dictionary user to my article, Circularity ... (see p. 787 for reference). In cases where I did not readily find a literary Mongolian parallel, I quote the location in RKWb, in the hope this will prove useful, especially since entries in RKWb can be hard to find at times. Ramstedt has in my view definitely "colloquialized" some script-Cirat words, i.e., included them in a phonetic form as if he had heard them--and he may indeed have verified some of these with speakers to claimed to know the words. These of course represent only a few dozen entries at most.

RS Rudnev Supplement, see now next entry, as Rudn.

100 entries

Rudn A. Rudnev, Посмертныя добавленія къ Монгольско-русскому словарю ...Голстунскаго..., St. PBg, 1901, 64 pages.

This work represents Rudnev's minor supplements and corrections to Golstunskii's dictionary issued after the latter's death. Those entries seem to be entirely included in Pozdneyev. Therefore, unless an entry has some relation to Kalmyk, I do not include it here. Regarding the format, a reference like 39-a,415 means Rudnev, page 39, column a, and page 415 in the Golstunskii volume.

Smir Smirnov

1,150 entries

Parmen Smirnov, Краткій русско-калмыцкій словарь, Kazan, 1857, 127 pages.

These entries do not impress me as being fully reliable; they require more work. I think Pozdneyev used Smirnov, because of many coinciding forms. I see a clear influence from Literary Mongolian. There are numerous careless errors in length, and in c/z, e.g., yončín for yunajin. Note further that I re-transcribe his type AAI as my AYI, e.g., his yaaila- becomes my ayila-, or his oairo is my oyiro.

UAJb 25 Haenisch, Fragments 30 entries

Erich Haenisch, Kalmükische Fragmente, in Ural-Altäische Jahrbücher, vol. 25, pp. 283-294, 1953.

A very bad article in a primitive transcription, giving Haenisch's ideas on some words found in manuscripts. His transcription is so unreliable and hard to understand that I decline to take any word except those not found in any other source. Now that we have the Heissig Verzeichnis, it might prove possible when in Germany to run down all the originals and locate words in question.

ZW Zwick Wörterbuch 5,000 entries

H. A. Zwick, Handbuch der westmongolischen Sprache, Donaueschingen, 1853, 482 pages.

ZW is a very important source for words, but must be accepted with some caution. First, I definitely feel it is under the influence of written Mongolian, and second, I feel it has many entries made quite mechanically, i.e., derived forms of passive, causative etc.

Let me explain further too that whereas I began with texts like SK, VJ, KK, building up a basic vocabulary, I then incorporated the material of Pozdneyev in the middle, and about the end of my compilation, I began to work with Zwick. As a result, my policy was not to take any word known from other sources, but only those words not found already, or having a form different from elsewhere. Hence, all derived stems are given, but derivations like -tan, -tai, -qci are not. Similarly, places, tribes and compounds where both parts are already known (ayil ulus, ayil küñ) are omitted.

At my direction, the entire old German handwriting was transcribed for me by Irmin Atkinson (Mrs Robert Atkinson), for which I thank her again; this copy is retained here in my files. Last, I think an analysis of Zwick's errors would reveal much about his sources, which still remain unknown to be, but which I hope to pursue sometime.
