D 1 karak 'eyeball'; prob. Dim. f. fr. kara: lit. 'little black thing'; not to be connected w. F kara:-. Survives in NE; NC Kır.; SW Tkm. (ğarak); in SE, NC Kzx. and SC forms of the Dim. f. karaçık are used instead; in NW usually phr. like köz karası and in SW Az., Osm. bebek (Pe. l.-w.). Uyğ. VIII ff. 2 karak 'brigandage' and the like, hardly to be regarded as morphologically identical with 1 karak; not noted before the medieval period but see karakçı: karakla:- and cf. karma:. N.o.a.b. Çağ. XV ff. karak means 'brigandage, pillage' (yağma ve tālān) since 'brigand' (ḥarāmi) is called karakçı Vel. 317 (two quotns. containing karakçı); (under karağ (1 karak)) 'the Rūmi author (Vel, 317) translated karağ 'arm' (bāzū) the reason being that 'highwayman' (rāhzan) is called karağçı, and also translated it 'brigandage, pillage' and said it meant 'black'; Naşīri followed him; all three translations are unknown and inappropriate (machūl wa ğayr ma'qūl) San. 271r. 26.

D kıruk Pass. Dev. N./A. fr. kır-; lit. 'scraped' or the like, and in the medieval period 'broken, destroyed'. Survives in NC Kır. kırık 'slaughter, extermination' R II 740, but in Yud. 'close cropped pasture'; and SW Az. ğırığ; Osm. kırık; Tkm. ğırık 'broken, fractured; a break; a broken piece, splinter'. It is doubtful whether the Çağ. word fits in here, the first meaning looks like a misreading of kıḍığ, see 2 kırğa:ğ, and the second is a l.-w. Xak. XI kıruk er al-raculu'l-aşall 'a cripple, disabled man'; and one says kıruk aḍak al-riclu'l-a'sam 'a withered leg' Kaş. I 382: KB 1737 (basımçı:): Çağ. XV ff. kırığ/kırık (1) kanār 'edge, side, shore', etc. (quotns.) also called kırağ/kırak; (2) 'a dry desert without water or vegetation' in general, in this meaning it is a Turcization of Ar. qaraq/qariq 'a level plain' (Qāmus quoted); and in particular (the name of) a desert between Tashkend and the city of Qūyā(?) which is seven days' journey in length; ((3) the name of a Türkmen tribe; (4) in Mong. 'bound' (quotn. Waşşāf)) San. 295v. 7.

D korığ (koru:ğ) Dev. N. fr. koru:-; 'an enclosure, enclosed area', particularly one enclosed by a ruler. An early l.-w. in Mong. as kori'a(n) 'courtyard, enclosed space' (Haenisch 67, Kow. 958); survives in SC Uzb. kürık 'virgin soil'; SW Az. ğoruğ 'game reserve, prohibited area of forest or pasture'; Osm. koru 'an enclosed area of forest or pasture'. L.-w. in Pe., etc. in a wide range of forms, Doerfer III 1462. Cf. koru:. Türkü VIII I N 8, II E 31 (1 ımğa:); Ongin 12 (ataç): Xak. XI korığ al-ḥimā li'l-umarā 'the private property of chiefs' (etc.); and any enclosed (maḥūz) place is called korığ Kaş. I 375; similarly their word korığ al-ḥimā; if you say koru:ğ it is permissible (cāza), but the word with the short vowel is more correct (afṣaḥ) than that with the long one I 18, 20: XII(?) KBVP (kings organizing) koruğı 'their private property' (and affairs) 36: XIII(?) At. (its owner has gone and) kaldı koruğ teg yėri 'his land has remained like a private estate' 202: Çağ. XV ff. ?D 2 *kuruğ See kuruğluğ.

karğa: properly 'crow', but sometimes also used for other large black birds like 'rook' and 'raven'; an old animal name ending in -ğa:. L.-w. in Pe., etc., see Doerfer III 1386. karğu: 'a watch-tower with a beacon on the top to give raid warnings'. Kaş.'s alternative form karğu:y is Hap. leg. but perhaps an earlier form, since in II E 37 the word looks more like karguñ than anything else and an evolution karğuñ > karğu:y > karğu: is quite plausible. Türkü VIII Seleŋe: koḍı: yorıpan karğuñ(?) kısılta: 'marching down the Selenga river I blockaded the watch-towers' (and destroyed their dwellings and movable property there) II E 37; karğu: T 34 (edgü:tı:); 53 (olğurt-): Uyğ. VIII Kem(?) karğu:sında: 'at the watch-tower of Kem(?)' should perhaps be read in Şu. I 426; karğu:y similar translation III 241.

VU(D) korğu: n.o.a.b.; prima facie a Dev. N./A.; not semantically connected with kur- but perhaps a crasis of korğu: fr. kork-. Xak. XI korğu: er al-raculu'l-ṭayyāş 'a heedless, irresponsible man' Kaş. I 426: (example of a word ending in -u:) al-raculu'l-naziq ditto korğu: I 18, 12.

D karğa:ğ Dev. N. fr. karğa:-; 'a curse'. Survives in NW Kk., Kaz. karğaw; Kumyk, Nog. karğav; cf. karğış. Xak. XI karğa:ğ (MS. karğa:k, but among words ending in -ğ) 'a curse' (al-la'n); hence one says teŋrı: karğa:ğıŋa: ilinme: 'do not incur the curse of God' Kaş. II 288; (a.o. I 467, error, see karğa:).

D 1 kırğa:ğ Hap. leg.; Dev. N. fr. 1 kırğa:-. Xak. XI kırğa:ğ 'the anger (ğaḍab) of a chief or king directed at his subordinates'; hence one says xa:n anı: kırğa:dı: 'the king was angry (ğaḍaba) with him, and shunned him' (a'raḍa 'anhu); they distinguish between the curse of God on His servants and the curse of one servant (of God) on another of his own kind, by placing a fatḥa (on the qāf) in the first case and a kasra in the second; just as they distinguish between the envoy (rasūl, i.e. Prophet) of God, and the envoy of a king, and call the first yala:vaç (-f-) and the second yala:var (-f-) in the Uyğ. language Kaş. II 288.

D 2 kırğa:ğ Hap. leg. but see kırğağlığ; Dev. N. fr. 2 *kırğa:-; there is an obvious connection with Çağ. kırığ/kırık (see kıruk) which looks like a Seç. f. of kıdığ; the sound change ḏ > r is not well attested in Turkish, but ḏ > z does occur in some languages and z > r in the whole l/r Turkish group (Studies, pp. 37 ff., etc.). Xak. XI kırğa:ğ kifāfu'l-ṭawb wa ṭurratihi 'the selvages of a garment and its edge' *Kaş. D kurğak (kurğa:k) Dev. N. fr. kurğa:-; 'dry land; dryness, drought'. Survives in NE, NC, NW kurğak; SC Uzb. kurğok; SW Az. ğurağ: Osm. kurak: Tkm. ğurak; Kaş.'s PU kurka:ğ seems to belong here, but is a dubious form, it is out of alphabetical order and the qāf is not vocalized; kurğağ would be a more plausible form. Uyğ. VIII ff. Bud. (if I have killed creatures that live in the water) kurğakda kemişip 'by throwing them on dry land', or kurğakdakı tınlığlarağ 'creatures that live on dry land' (by throwing them in the water) U II 77, 28; 86, 45–6; TT IV 10, 9–10: Xak. XI kurğak yılın fī 'āmi'l-qaḥṭ 'in a year

F kurma:n 'bow-case'; there is an apparent ·nological connection with kuruğluk, same · but the word itself, which is only ··in., seems to be a corruption of Pe. qurbān, and that word, though not so far traced in Ar. with this meaning, seems to be derived fr. qaraba, which inter alia means 'to put (something) in a sheath or case'. The word seems therefore to be by origin Ar., or at any r: e Pe.-Ar., and one of a number of such words in Oğuz (see 2 turma:), and the connection with kuruğluk illusory. The long note on the word in P. Pelliot, Notes sur l'histoire de la Horde d'Or, Paris, 1950, p. 42, must be corrected accordingly. See also the discussion of Pe. qurbān in Doerfer III 1451. ka:s 'the bark of a tree', less specific than to:z 'birch bark'. The word is entered under the cross-heading -S in Kaş.; the spelling ka:z is prob. due to the fact that after long -a:- a -z might be expected. VUD kayığ Dev. N./A. fr. kay- (2 *ka:ḍ-); the existence of this word is doubtful; in the entry in Kaş. the qāf carries a fatḥa and the yā' is unvocalized, but this entry follows koyuğ and the normal order of words with the same consonants in Kaş. is the usual one, fatḥa, ḍamma, kasra; in this position therefore kıyığ, a Sec. f. of kıdığ, would be expected, and the resemblance between the translations of this word and kıyık in Kaş. makes this all the more probable. The word in Vel., if correctly translated, is more likely to be a Pass. Dev. N./A., but San. does not mention this meaning and lists only kayuk (kayğuk), and it is very prob. that Vel.'s is a mistranslation. Xak. XI kayığ (?kıyığ) yé:r al-mawḍi'u'l--munḥarifa 'ani'l-cādda wa ğayrihi 'a place at an angle from the (main) road, etc.' *Kaş. D kıyık (kıḍuk) Pass. Dev. N./A. fr. kıy-; 'crooked, cut on a slant', and the like. Easily confused with kıyığ (kıdığ) in some modern languages. NE Tel. kıyık 'anger' R II 716; Khak. xıyıx 'injury, insult' may belong here; the word certainly survives in SW Osm. kıyık 'minced, chopped up' (the translation 'fainting fit' in R II 716 is not confirmed elsewhere); Tkm. ğıyık 'crooked'. Uyğ. VIII ff. küveç survives in SW Az. küvec; Osm. güvec 'a flat, shallow earthenware cooking pot'. The exact meaning in Xak. is obscure; as Brockelmann points out al-nayrakī is an error for al-nayzakī (Dozy II 631); the meaning is prob. 'a curb bit'. The connection between the two meanings is obscure. The spelling with -w- in Kaş. is deliberate, since it is under the kök, etc. Preliminary note. There is great difficulty in determining how many early Turkish words of this general form there were and what were the qualities of their vowels and final consonants. Nawā'i had the same difficulty, see the quotn. fr. the Muḥākimatu'l-luġatayn in Vel., p. 370 (top) where five alternative meanings are given:—'sky, melody, seam, cauterization (see 4 kök) and vegetation'. After the correction mentioned under* kek has been made Kaş. lists three words with a short vowel and ten (some alternative meanings of the same word) with a long one. The first three mean 'pain, suffering' (kük or küg?); 'root' (kök) and 'thong' (kök) respectively. There is also another apparently early word meaning 'seam' or the like (kök). If this really is the word in Uyğ. it can hardly be a l.-w. fr. Pe. kūk 'basting', and in that event the Pe. word may be a Turkish l.-w., but the status of the word is a little uncertain. Of the second ten the first (and so presumably the next six) are described as ending in -g, and the eighth (and so presumably the other two) as ending in -k. The first two 'metre' and 'melody' are alternative translations of the same word kü:g and the third 'a popular joke' is prob. an extended meaning of it. The fourth and fifth relating to animals were also certainly kü:g. The sixth and seventh, 'rust' and 'freckles', must be alternative translations of the same word which does not seem to be traceable elsewhere, but was perhaps kü:g. The eighth and ninth 'sky' and 'sky coloured' are alternative translations of kö:k. The last entry is a phr. meaning 'a village headman' otherwise traced only in KB*; it is possible that the first element is the same word as the preceding.*

VU 5 kö:k in the phr. kö:k ayu:k; pec. to Xak. Ayu:k is otherwise unknown, and its meaning obscure; it is not therefore possible to say whether kö:k in this phr. has one of its normal meanings. Xak. XI kö:k ayu:k (spelt as one word, but immediately follows 4 kö:k) 'the title given to the headmen of villages and Türkmen (tribes)' (akābiratu'l-rasātiq wa'l-turkmān) *Kaş. VUF 1 kü:g 'Song, melody', and the like; l.-w. fr. Chinese ch'ü, Middle Chinese k'jok, 'song' (Giles 3,062). Survives in most NE languages; NC Kır., Kzx.; SC Uzb. as kü, küg, küy; l.-w. in Pe. as kūk in such phr. as kūk kardan 'to tune (an instrument)'. Uyğ. VIII ff. Man. tükedi Afrin Çor Tégin küği 'here ends Afrin Çor Tégin's hymn' M II 8, 19; a.o.(?) do. 7, 1–2 (takşut): Xak. XI kü:g ('with -g') 'aruḍu'l-şi'r 'the metre of a poem'; one says bu: yı:r ne: kü:g üze: ol 'what is the metre of this poem?' (ġazal): kü:g 'the tune of a song' (al-laḥn fi'l-ġinā); hence one says er kü:glendi: ġanā'l-racul bi-laḥn lahu 'the man sang a song in its (right) tune'; (in a verse, misplaced after 3 kü:g) kü:gler kamuğ tüzüldi: waqa'ati'l-muwāfaqa bayn alḥāni'l-ġinā' 'harmony has been established between the tunes of the songs' *Kaş. VU 2 kü:g immediately follows the two entries of 1 kü:g, and is prob. merely an extended meaning of that word, since there is a similar combination of meanings in Khak. Xak. XI kü:g the word for any 'joke' (aḍḥuka) which circulates among the people of any town during some year and is passed from mouth to mouth; hence one says bu: yıl kü:g keldi: 'this year's joke has arrived' Kaş. III 131.

?D 3 kü:g no doubt Dev. N./A. fr. kü:-; survives only(?) in NC Kzx. küy 'the tending of livestock'; this word also means 'the condition of livestock', which may belong here, or be an attenuated meaning of 4 kü:g. Xak. XI kü:g yılkı: al-dābbatu'l-masrūḥa acma' 'cattle driven out to pasture in a herd' Kaş. III 131 (followed by a verse illustrating 1 kü:g).

4 kü:g survives in the NC Kır. phr. kü:gö kel- (of sheep and other female animals) 'to be on heat, ready to be mated'; Kzx. küy (see 3 kü:g) seems to have the same meaning, cf. küylö- (of cattle, sheep and dogs) 'to mate' R II 1420. Xak. XI kü:g sifādu'l-kabş wa'l-wuxūş fī awānihi şātīya(n), 'the mating of rams and wild animals in the mating season in winter'; hence one says ko:y kü:gi: boldı: 'the mating season for sheep (etc.) has arrived' Kaş. III 132.

PU 5 kü:g Hap. leg. in both senses; for 'rust' the ordinary words are bas and 2 tat; there is no generally accepted Turkish word for 'freckle'; SW Osm. uses çi:l, but most languages use words derived, with some phonetic changes, fr. Mong. sebgül. Xak. XI kü:g 'the rust' (al-ṭib'; MS. ṭab') which forms on the surface of a mirror; hence one says közŋüke: kü:g tüştı: 'greeness (al-xuḍra) and rust have formed on the surface of the mirror': kü:g 'freckles' (al-kalafa) which appear on the faces of women (etc.) Kaş. III 132.

PU kük (or 6 küg?) 'suffering, distress'; prob. n.o.a.b.; R II 1417 notes a NC Kzx.(?) phr. kiły kör- 'to suffer pain, or distress', but there is no other trace of it and there are in NC several words with a similar meaning which go back to küñ-. See kükmek. Uyğ. VIII ff. Civ. közüŋ içinde kük yok köŋülüŋ içinde kaḍğu: yok 'there is no pain in your eyes or anxiety in your mind' TT I 144–5: Xak. XI kük (misvocalized kek) al-miḥna 'distress, suffering'; hence one says kük (ditto) kördi: er 'the man suffered pain' (imtaḥana) Kaş. II 283; kük (so vocalized) kördi: kere:kü: yüdti: 'he was so badly off (ra'ā'l--miḥna) that he had to carry his tent framework on his own back' I 448, 1 (cf. keten).

D 2 küglе:- Den. V. fr. 3 kü:g; 'to graze'. As pasture is green there was an obvious temptation to regard this V. as identical with 2 köklе-; this seems to be at the back of the entry köklе- 'to graze, put cattle out to graze' in Vam. 330, reproduced in R II 1227 as 'Çağ., Bokhara'; but the Refl f. küylen- (of cattle) 'to be well-nourished' in NC Kzx. preserves the earlier form. Xak. XI yılkı: küglе:dі: ibtaqalati'l-dawābb wa akalati'l-rabī' 'the cattle grazed and eat the spring pasture' *Kaş. D köklet- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of 1 köklе:-; this V. is listed under the cross-heading -D- (for the third consonant) which suggests that the original entry had kökdet-; the alternative form is morphologically inexplicable. kim properly only the Interrogative Pron. 'who?', parallel to ne: 'what?', but, unlike ne:, never used as an Interrog. Adj. The concept of Relative Prons. was entirely foreign to Turkish, in which Participles and the like are used where Indo-European languages use Relative Prons.,

E 2 kün has been read in various passages, almost certainly wrongly. In O. Kır. IX ff. the word read kün in Mal. 3, 1 etc. is in fact spelt k i n and seems to be ekin, q.v. The phr., or word, transcribed él kün in KB and several later authorities seems to be in fact élgün, i.e. 1 é:l, q.v., with the Collective Suff. -gün. It is possible that the word transcribed küydeki and listed under 1 kuy, q.v., should in fact be transcribed kündeki, which was F. W. K. Müller's reading. If so, this kün seems to be a l.-w. fr. Chinese k'un 'the door to the women's appartments' (Giles 6,550). See Doerfer III 1689, which is partly based on unreliable authorities.

VUD kénik- (g-) in a note on V.s ending in -k- Kaş. says that these fall into two classes; (a) basic V.s like aşuk- and çülük-; (b) V.s in which the Suff. indicates that the Subject of the V. is unable to achieve his desires, like basık- der. fr. bas-, usuk- der. fr. us-, kirik- and this V. The first two are Emphatic/Pass. forms, but kirik- is a Den. V. fr. ki:r, and it is likely that this V. too, which has a ḍamma over the kāf is a Den. V., since there is obviously no semantic connection with kön-, and the obvious explanation is that it is a Den. V. fr. 2 ké:n. The only other known occurrence is in KB 4389 where the Fergana MS. has kinilse, the Cairo MS. ki[gap]se and the Vienna MS. has a word which might be kénikse but looks more like könikse Xak. XI er kénikti: (MS. könikti) ğalaba 'alā'l-raculi'l--ḍa'f ḥattā ta'axxara 'an aṣḥābihi 'the man was overcome by weakness, so that he fell behind his companions' *Kaş. D körtgür- (g-) 'to show'; Caus. f. of kör- w. euphonic -t- inserted. It and the shortened form körgür- are n.o.a.b. A new word körgüz-, which can be regarded as a Sec. f. of this word, appeared in the medieval period; the early occurrences are listed below. Another new word görset-, which is morphologically, but hardly semantically, a Caus. f. of körse:-, is first noted in Osm. XIV and XV, three texts TTS II 456; III 312; IV 357. The other early Caus. f.s of kör- are körtür- and körgit-, q.v. There is a remarkable variety of modern forms, some languages having two or three. Usually these are completely syn., but, for example, in SE Türki körgüz- means 'to help to see' (e.g. with the help of glasses) and körset- 'to show', and in SW Az. kördür- means 'to order (someone) to see to, i.e. do (something)' and köster- (a metathesis of körset-?) 'to show, demonstrate'. The modern forms, nearly all meaning 'to show', are as follows: NE Alt., Leb., Sag., Şor, Tel. körgüs-; Küer. körkös- R II 1262; Kaç., Koib., Sag. körtüs-; Şor körtös- 1265; Khak. kördür-/körgis-; Tuv. körgüz-: SE Tar. körket- 1260; körgüz- 1262; körset- 1265; Türki körgüz-/körset-: NC Kır. kördür-/körgöz-/körsöt-; Kzx. körgiz-/korset-: SC Uzb. kürgaz-/kürsat-: NW Kar. In Kaş. the word, although vocalized ké:rik, rhymes with sevük, nelük, be:dük and must originally have been kerük which is morphologically correct. Xak. XI in a verse containing several corruptions translated 'my friend, how did you get to us and cross the long deserts (al-mafāwiza'l-madīda) and' ya:zı: kerük (MS. balzı: ké:rik) 'high mountains', *Kaş. ?D körük 'bellows'; this might be a Dev. N. (N.I.), but the only authority for körü- 'to blow with the bellows' is Red. 1589 and this may be merely a back-formation. S.i.a.m.l.g. except SC; SW Tkm. kö:rük (prob. a false long vowel). The only meaning of körük in Vel. and the second meaning in San. is 'a hen which has stopped laying'; this meaning survives in SW Tkm. kürk/kürük, is described as Persian in the Burhān-i Qāti'; this is prob. correct; it does not seem to be Turkish. Xak. XI körük al-ḥimlūc wa minfāxu'l-ḥaddād 'a blacksmith's bellows' (Hend.) *Kaş. kerki: 'an adze'. Survives with this meaning in SE Türki: NC Kır.; al-qaddūm has other meanings ('axe, hatchet'), but the word prob. always meant 'adze'. In a note on this passage, Hüen-ts., p. 25, note 156, v.G. suggests that the word actually means nirmāṇakaya, the first of the Buddha's three bodies, the 'shadow body' which he can assume for certain purposes; this seems to be a mistake; the replicas were no doubt nirmāṇakāyas, but the Turkish for that word was belgürtme (q.v.) etöz. Uyğ. VIII ff. VU kürs- Hap. leg.; listed as a Mon. V. ending in two consonants. The reference to sa:- is incomprehensible unless it is intended to be to the Desid. V. Suff. -sa:-/-se:-, with the implication that the word is der. fr. 1 kür. This is of course impossible; the mis-spelling of the Infin. may be consequential from it. Xak. XI yigit ka:na: (?error for ka:nka:) kürsdi: 'the young man was full (imtala'a) of blood and fat', so that he radiated gaiety (abdā min nafsihi'l-muẓūn). The origin is that a vessel is filled with something, then after a short time (the contents) expand (intafaxa) until they exceed the limit of fullness (zāda 'an ḥaddi'l--imtilā'); for example dough, when it is mixed with a lot of yeast and put in a dish and almost fills it, and is then left for a short time, expands till it overflows the rim of the dish (kürse:r, kürsme:k—MS. kürse:me:k). The origin is their remark of (or to?) a gay, cheerful (al--baṭīru'l-aşīr) man sa:dı:; we have explained (bayyannā) the meaning of it *Kaş. kisi: 'wife'; cf. kis; kisi: is the older and prob. the original form. Owing to the ambiguity of the Runic and Uyğ. scripts and the nearness of meaning of the two words kişi: has frequently been transcribed (being much the commoner word) where kisi: was really intended. D közünük (g-) Dev. N. (Conc. N.) fr. közün-; 'a window'. There is a morphological and semantic difference between this and köznek, q.v., -ük being properly a Pass. (or, for Intrans. V.s, an Intrans.) Suff.; this word must therefore lit. mean 'something which is seen', perhaps with the application of 'something which is seen from within the building' rather than 'something you see out of'; the later meaning 'aperture' and the like is obviously a metaph. extension. Survives in most NE languages as köznek/köznök/közönök/közünök 'window' R II 1302–3; Khak., Tuv. közenek: NC Kır. közönök 'aperture; button-hole': SC Uzb. küzanak 'a hole; a cell (in a honey-comb)', most of which look more like modern forms of köznek. Türkü VIII ff. It is generally believed, and is no doubt true, that no native Turkish word begins with l-; all the words listed below are either demonstrably l.-w.s or of a kind which might reasonably be supposed to be l.-w.s. It is also possible that there are some l.-w.s listed above in which the initial l- is preceded by a prosthetic vowel. If so, these would be parallel to the l.-w.s with initial r- preceded by a prosthetic vowel, see R. Some Chinese and Indian l.-w.s with initial l- which occur only in Uyğ. texts have not been included below since they never became fully naturalized in Turkish.

No native Turkish word except a few onomatopoeics, particles, etc., originally began with m-, but in most Turkish languages initial b-, when followed by a nasal within the body of the word (but not in Suffs.), is changed to m- by assimilation. In a few languages, like Xwar. XIII(?), this change has taken place even when there is no nasal in the word. Words with initial m-, of which the original form has not survived, are listed here as main entries; the remainder are entered here only w. cross-references.

1 ma:/1 me: perhaps an abbreviation of yéme:; an Enclitic with several functions. (1) in some cases it is best translated 'and' or 'too', and indeed has been treated by some authorities as an independent word, although there is no real doubt that it is an enclitic. (2) in others it hardly seems to do more than give some emphasis to the preceding word. (3) attached to the Interrogatives, kim, ne:, etc. it turns them into indefinite relatives, e.g. ne:çe: 'how much?', ne:çe:me: 'however much'. It disappeared in the medieval period except in a few words like ne:me:, q.v., in which it has become fused with the preceding word to form a new word. It is discussed at length in v. G. ATG, paras. 291, 352; Brockelmann, para. 144*b*. Uyğ. VIII ff. Man.-A kaltı/ınça kaltı . . . ançulayu ma 'just as . . . so also' M I 13, 10; 14, 13; 17, 16: Bud. III* 118; ma: (or me:?) an Exclamation meaning 'take it'; hence one says ma: xuḍ wa hāka 'take it, here you are'; it is said both with hā' and with alif ma(h); examples of alternative spellings with initial hā' and alif in Ar. follow III 213.

F no:m the Greek word nomos properly 'law' was a l.-w. in Syriac and was adopted by the Manichaeans as a technical term with a rather wider meaning 'law, doctrine', etc.; from this it passed to Sogdian as nwm and was used in Buddhist texts to translate Sanskrit dharma, which has an even wider range of meanings. In Turkish it is used in both Man. and Bud. texts with a similarly wide range of meanings. It is not connected with Tokharian A ñom mentioned in TT X 58 note; this is a pure Tokharian word meaning (and cognate to the English word) 'name'. Initial r-, like initial l-, q.v., was a sound entirely foreign to the Turkish language and any l.-w. with initial r- which became established in the early language assumed a prosthetic ', e.g. ertini, erej. There is a sprinkling of Indian and Iranian l.-w.s in some Man. and Bud. texts without the prosthetic vowel, e.g. ratni, the Tokharian form of Sanskrit ratna, which later became ertini, but these are not listed here since they never became at home in Turkish. In the Moslem period a number of Arabic and Persian l.-w.s entered the language unchanged, but those used in popular speech usually assumed a prosthetic vowel, e.g. SW Osm. uruc 'fasting, a canonical fast', a corruption of Pe. rūza. The only word with initial r- in Kaş. is that listed below.

VUF rabçat (fully vocalized) Hap. leg.; origin uncertain, but no doubt an Indo-European l.-w. cognate to Russian rab 'slave'; rabota 'work', etc. Gancak XI rabçat al-suxrīya 'unpaid forced labour'; as when for example a chief (al-amīr) takes animals belonging to the peasantry (al-ra'īya) and carries his goods on them without payment *Kaş. VU 1 sü: 'army'. The theory put forward in TT X, p. 19, note 206 that this should be transcribed şö: and taken as a l.-w. fr. Chinese shou 'to hunt' (Giles 10,013) is quite untenable since the spelling with s- is universal in texts in Ar. script. The word itself cannot be traced later than about XV, but the phr. sü: başı: 'army commander' lived on and, when sü: itself had been forgotten, was taken to be su: başı: and used for 'water (i.e. irrigation) superintendent', an official of great importance in the Middle East, see e.g. SW Osm. şu başı Sami 835, Red. 1188. sap-, sep- Preliminary note. There is great confusion about V.s of these two forms. The only certain form in Türkü is sep- 'to repair (something broken)', and the only certain form in Uyğ. sap- 'to instil, graft', and the like, although 'to equip, fit out' was almost certainly sep-. Kaş. lists only sap- and translates it (1) 'to thread (a needle)'; (2) 'to repair (something broken)', but distinguishes between saptur- 'to order to repair' and septür- 'to order to provide a dowry', obviously a Caus. f. of sep- which is homophonous w. sep *'a dowry'. D suvğarın- Hap. leg.; Refl. f. of suvğar-, used as a Simulative; in a grammatical section immediately before suvğarımsın-; the MS. actually has suvğardı: but the context shows this to be an error. Xak. XI if it is desired to express the idea that a man pretends to do something but does not actually do it, one way is to add nūn (to the basic V.) before the dāl (of the Perf.), e.g. ol at suvğarındı: (so read) 'he pretended to water (yusqī) the horse' *Kaş. D salkım occurs in two quite different meanings (1) 'cold; hoar-frost', and the like, and rather later (2) 'something pendulous, a bunch of grapes, ear-rings', and the like. In the first sense it is syn. w. sarkım, q.v., which is prima facie a N.S.A. fr. sark-; but sark- means 'to hang limply' and the like, so is semantically the basis of salkım in its second sense. On the other hand this is also one meaning of salın-, q.v. The explanation is perhaps that salk-, a der. f. in -k- (Intrans.) of sal-, also meant 'to hang limply' and is the basis of salkım in its second sense, and that sark- and sarkım are Sec. f.s of these words. But the connection between sal- and its derivatives and 'cold' is obscure. Salkım in the sense of 'a bunch of grapes', and the like, survives in NW Kk. solkım: SW Az. salxım; Osm., Tkm. salkım; it does not survive in the sense of 'cold', but the cognate form salkın s.i.a.m.l.g., in NE Alt., Tel. for 'a violent (cold) wind', elsewhere for 'cool', or 'cold' (weather). Uyğ. VIII ff. C sı:m sımra:k Hap. leg.; listed among Mon.s w. a central long vowel, which shows that sı:m is an alliterative Prefix. sen the 2nd Pers. Sing. Pron. 'thou'. The vocalization follows the same irregular pattern as ben, q.v., the Dat. having always been saŋa:. In other cases the vowel was almost certainly -e-; spellings w. -é- are fairly common in some dialects, but it seems impossible to find any grammatical explanation of the difference. In Türkü sen was used both as Sing. and as Plur., the regular Plur. siz not being found in these texts, perhaps fortuitously, but in Xak., q.v., it was regarded as uncivil to address anyone except an inferior as sen. C.i.a.p.a.l. Türkü VIII sen occurs several times attached to V.s, e.g. ölteçi: sen 'you will die' I S 8, II E 6; séni: Tavğaçığ ölu:rteçi: 'they will kill you Chinese' T 10 (the only example of -é-); ben seŋe: (so spelt, perhaps in error) ne: ayayı:n 'what shall I say to you?' T 32: VIII ff. sı:n Preliminary note. Kaş.'s theory that the second word is merely a special meaning of the first is not plausible and the two have been listed separately. See sına:-.

1 sı:n originally 'the human body', hence 'stature, height, external appearance', and the like. Survives in the latter meanings in NE: SE: NC Kır.: NW Kk., Kaz., Nog., and in some of them for 'statue', esp. one on a grave. Cf. 1 bo:d. Türkü VIII ff. 2 sı:n 'tomb'; survives only(?) in SW Osm. sin (sic); v. G. in TT VI, p. 89 suggested that this might be a l.-w. fr. Chinese ts'in (ch'in, Giles 2,091) 'the rear hall in an ancestral temple', but this is impossible since in Middle Chinese this word had a final -m, not -n. Uyğ. VIII ff. Bud. siŋ onomatopoeic for a humming or buzzing noise; n.o.a.b. Cf. siŋek, siŋi:le:-. In some Uyğ. Bud. texts siŋ is a mistranscription of şéŋ, q.v. Xak. XI one says kula:kım siŋ etti: 'my ear buzzed' (ṭanna); and kömi:çe: (MS. kömünçe:) siŋ etti: 'the gnat buzzed' (naqqa), also used of a fly buzzing *Kaş. Bud. is also spelt su:n in the passages below. Kaş.'s exact meaning is uncertain; al-ṣuftaca means 'a bill of exchange, cheque', and the like. The reference is perhaps to Chinese paper currency; these notes varied a good deal in size; it can hardly be to physical gold. Uyğ. VIII ff. VUF sünzi: Hap. leg.; 'louse'. No doubt a l.-w. fr. a Chinese phr. The second syllable is the common enclitic tzŭ (Giles 12,317), but there are difficulties about the first. The normal Chinese word for 'louse' is shih/sê (Giles 9,929); there is an alternative word, Giles 9,930, Karlgren, Grammata Serica Recensa, no. 506*a*., which has the same pronunciation, but has as its upper part a character, Karlgren, op. cit., no. 383*a*., which serves as a phonetic sin/sün (both current) in Giles 4,584–6/4,894–6. Prof. W. Simon says that there is no evidence that it ever had this phonetic value in Giles 9,930, but as its presence in that character is unexplained (see Karlgren, op. cit.) it seems possible that there was once a Chinese word sün, or the like, for 'louse' which was later displaced by shih/sê, a commoner word. Xak. XI sünzi: şay' min cinsi'l-barğûṯ wa aḥsibuhu'l--qaml a thing of the flea family; I reckon that it is 'louse' *Kaş. VUD sürgü:le:- Hap. leg.; the vocalization is uncertain; the word is in a section for Tris. V.s ending in -le:- of which the second vowel is long; the Perf. is spelt sürgi:le:di:, the Aor. and Infin. sürgüle:-; it is fairly obvious that the first is right on the length and the second on the quality of the vowel and that it is a Den. D sarıl- Pass. f. of 1 sa:r-; n.o.a.b.; the translation in Kaş., which would be appropriate for 1 sa:r- and has no Pass. connotation, is inexplicable, but the word is used as an ordinary Pass. in KB; arıldı: is a mere jingle, see 2 arıl-. Xak. XI beg aŋa:r arıldı: sarıldı: 'the beg (etc.) was angry with him' *Kaş. D sarul- Pass. f. of saru:- this V. seems to occur in two consecutive paras. in Kaş.; in the first the Perf. is spelt saruldı:, but the Aor. and Infin. are spelt sarıl-; in the second the Perf. is spelt sırıldı: but the Infin. is spelt sarul-; the basic meaning is 'to be wrapped round (something)'. There is, however, one difficulty about this explanation; in Uyğ. Man. a V. meaning 'to be attached to (something)' is clearly spelt sırıl-; this might be a Pass. f. of sırı:- as a metaph. application of 'to be sewn firmly to (something)', but there is no other trace of such a V.; sırıl- in some medieval and modern languages is a Sec. f. of sığrıl-, q.v. Sarul- survives as sarıl- in NW Kaz.; SW Az., Osm. and saral- in Tkm. (Uyğ. VIII ff. Man. sırılmışlarka TT III 53 (il-)): Xak. XI yışığ yığa:çka: saruldı: 'the rope was wrapped round (iltaffa) the tree'; also used of other things (sarulur, sarulma:k; MS. sarıl-); and one says ya:ğ eligke: saruldı: (MS. sırıldı:) 'the oil stuck to (iltaṣaqa) the hand'; also used when parts of something have stuck to something else, e.g. flour to felt (sarlur (sic), sarulma:k) *Kaş. D seril- except perhaps in Uyğ. can hardly be a Pass. f. of 1 ser- (which is normally Intrans.) and presents some problems. In Kaş. it is clearly cognate to serge:k and the Pass. f. of 2 *ser-. This V., w. the connotation of 'to be fickle', may be that in PP 78, 5–6 (see amrak) but the right reading there might be sarılur. In SW Az., Osm., Tkm. seril- is the Pass. f. of ser- with its meaning in those languages, and means 'to be spread out' (e.g. to dry). Uyğ. VIII ff. Bud. (when I enter nirvāṇa, my doctrinal teaching called 'good' without being extinguished or diminished . . .) yértinçüde serilip turur 'will endure (or remain?) on earth' Suv. 164, 16–17 (cf. Civ.); Sanskrit missing se:rilü *TT VIII F.*10; a.o. PP 78, 5–6 (amrak): Civ. in TT VII 1, an astronomical text, the word used for a planet 'remaining' in a particular constellation is serer (see ser-), but in l. 46 it is serilür: Xak. XI er serildi: (translated) tamāyala'l-sakrān 'the drunken man swayed', and almost fell down; also used of anything else that sways and almost falls down *Kaş. The only vowel sign is a ḍamma on the sīn. There is no good morphological explanation of the word, but it might be a compound of sö:z and an abbreviated Dev. F şaḍ Iranian l.-w. in a form not found in any known dialect, but cognate to Saka šao, Sogdian 'γšyδ, Pe. šāh, ultimately der. fr. Old Pe. χšāyaθīya. In Turkish the title, ranking prob. next after xağan and bestowed by the xağan on some close relative, younger brother or son, often carried with it the duty of ruling part of the xağan's dominions, so that 'viceroy' is perhaps the nearest English equivalent, but not an exact translation. In Turkish, apart fr. one occurrence in Uyğ. and a very dubious one in O. Kır., Mal. 2, 1, pec. to Türkü, but various Turkish şaḍs are mentioned in the Chinese records, the word being transcribed sha, shê, or ch'a, see Chavannes, Documents sur les Tou-kiue (Turcs) occidentaux, St. Petersburg, 1900, p. 320. Cf. yabğu:. PUF yabğu: a title of great antiquity, certainly going back to the Yüeh-chih, that is before the Christian Era, which has frequently been discussed by historians of Central Asia (for some refces. see Caf., p. 226). In the Türkü period it was, like şaḍ, q.v., a title conferred by the xağan on close relatives and normally carried with it the duty of administering part of the xağan's dominions. Although the yabğu: is sometimes mentioned before the şaḍ he prob. ranked below rather than above him. After the Türkü period the title seems to have lost some importance and Kaş. describes it as two ranks below the xağan, that is below the yuğruş 'vizier', q.v.; by this time the title şad had disappeared. The word is spelt yavğu: in Xak.; the pronunciation in Türkü is uncertain owing to the ambiguity of the Runic alphabet, but as it is spelt ıapğu (in the Hephthalite version of the Greek alphabet) on a coin attributed by Ghirshman to a Western Türkü ruler of the mid-seventh Century (see H. Ghirshman, Les Chionites-Hephtalites, Cairo, Institut français d'Archéologie orientale, 1948, p. 50) it was prob. yabğu:. It survived as the title of the supreme ruler of the Oğuz of the Aral Sea area until the tenth century, but most references to it are in non-Turkish (Chinese, Ar., Pe., etc.) texts. The Turkish refces. are assembled below. Türkü VIII (at the beginning of his reign Élteris Xağan organized his realm and inter alia) yabğu:ğ şaḍığ anta: bérmiş 'then appointed the yabğu: and the şaḍ' I E 14, II E 12; Él etmiş Yabğu: oğlı: (VU) Işvara: Tamğan Çor Yabğu: inl:si: 'son of Él-etmiş Yabğu: and younger brother of Işvara: Tamğan Çor Yabğu:' Ongin 4; o.o. II E 28 (şaḍ); T 41–2: Uyğ. VIII [gap] Tay Bilge: Totokığ yabğu: ata:dı: 'he nominated Tay Bilge: Totok as yabğu:' *Şu. D yapa:ku: (ḍ-) morphologically obscure (-ku: is not a recognized Suff.) but obviously connected w. yap- and 2 yap, w. which it is more or less syn., and perhaps a Dev. N. fr. yapa:- a Den. V. fr. the latter. It seems originally to have meant 'matted hair, or wool' (cf. yapğut) and hence 'an animal whose hair has grown long and matted' and, more specifically, 'a colt', and 'a man whose hair is long and matted', hence perhaps its use as a tribal name. It became a First Period l.-w. in Mong. as da'ağa(n) 'two-year-old colt' (Haenisch 30; dağa in Kow. 1570, Haltod 445); the connection w. Mong. dağaki 'a tangle or mass of hair' (Haltod 445; w. Den. V. listed there and in Kow. 1581) is obscure. It survives as yapağı in SW Az. 'the spring shearing of hair or wool'; Osm. (also yapak) 'wool in the fleece'; and as yapağı in SW Tkm.; yabağa/yabağı/çabağı/jabağı, etc. in most NE, NC, NW languages, for 'colt', the ages (from 'newly born' to 'two-year-old') varying fr. language to language, see Shcherbak, p. 92. Xak. XI Yapa:ku: 'a tribe (cīl) of the Turks'; yapa:ku: 'a thick mass (al-qarda) of wool or hair on the head'; (and) when it has become matted (iltabada) one says yapa:ku: boldı:; Yapa:ku: suvı: the name of a river which flows to ('alā) Özcend and Farğāna from the mountains of Kāşğar Kaş. III 36 (the Yapa:ku: (hitherto transcribed Yaba:ku:) tribe, and words in its dialect, are mentioned elsewhere in Kaş.): Çağ. xv ff. yapağ/yapak ('with -p-') kura-i asb şīr-xwāra 'an unweaned colt' San. 325v. 22: Xwar. xiv yapağu koy 'a sheep with a thick fleece' Qutb 63 (-b-): Kıp. xiii al-cazza mina'l-şūf 'a shearing of wool' yapa:ğu: (MS. in error baya:ğu:) Hou. 15, 5: xv wabar 'soft hair' (of the camel, etc.) yapak (-b-) Tuh. 38b. 2—ḥawliyu'l-xayl 'a one-year-old colt' yapağlı (sic, -b-) do. 13a. 1: Osm. xviii yapağ/yapak . . . and, in Rūmī, paşm-i narm 'soft wool', in Ar. şūf San. 325v. 22.

D yapığlığ (?ḏ-) P.N./A. fr. yapığ; s.i.s.m.l. in various forms and meanings. Xak. xi yapığlığ kapuğ 'a bolted (muğlak) door' Kaş. III 49: Kom. xiv 'fitted with a cover' yabovlı CCG; Gr.

D yapa:kulak in Kaş. this word in both meanings is described as peculiar to the Yapa:ku: and Yeme:k dialects, which makes it fairly certain that it is a Dev. N./A. fr. a Den. V. fr. Yapa:ku: as a tribal name, meaning lit. (a disease or bird) 'peculiar to the Yapa:ku: country'. This would explain why it has two quite different meanings, the first Hap. leg., the second not a generic term for 'owl', which is ügi:, q.v., but the name of some particular kind of owl, not always the same. In the first entry the yā' carries a ḍamma, but this is an obvious error since with this spelling it should have followed the second. Survives meaning 'owl', of no specified kind except where stated, in NE Bar. yapkulak R III 267; Koib. yaba:kulak do. 273; Tob. yabalak 277: SE Tar., Türki yapalak 'short-eared owl, Otus brachyotus' Shaw 215, etc.: NW Kk., Nog. japalak; Kaz., Krım, Kumyk yabalak 'great owl, Bubo maximus': SW Az. yapalağ; Osm. yapalak 'great owl'. Yapa:ku:, Yeme:k xi yapa:kulak al-ri'da mina'l-ḥumma 'feverish shivering, ague'; yapa:kulak al-ḥāma mina'l-ṭayr 'owl' Kaş. III 56: Çağ. xv ff. yapalak ('with -p-') 'a yellow bird with large eyes'; the author of the Burhān-i Qāṭi' says that in Pe. it is called cağna, arabicized as cağnaq (same meaning) San. 325v. 25 (prob. 'great owl'): Kom. xiv 'screech-owl' yabalak CCI; Gr.: Kıp. xiii al-būm 'the great owl' yabala:k Hou. 10, 8: xiv (under 'birds') al-maşşāşa wa'l- (VU) waraş 'screech-owl' ditto (vocalized yıblak) Bul. 12, 2—yabalak 'uryān (this word, der. fr. 'ariya, means 'naked'; if it could be taken as a non-Classical der. f. fr. 'arā ('ariwa) 'to shiver', it might be linked to Kaş.'s first meaning; but it is likelier to be a quite different word or corrupt) Id. 91: xv maşşāşa yablak Tuh. 33b. 7: Osm. xvi Pe. cuğd 'owl' translated bay kuş, also called ügü and yapalak; in one dict. TTS IV 839.

yıpa:r the relationship between this word and kin, q.v., is obscure; kin has always meant 'musk', the secretion of the musk-deer and the musk-rat; yıpa:r seems originally to have meant more generally 'scent, fragrance', both of musk and of other things like flowers, esp. in the Hend.. yı:d yıpa:r, but became specialized for 'musk' at an early date. 2 ya:t (-d) 'rain magic; rain stone'; the history of this word, which is extremely complicated, is discussed at length in Doerfer I, 157 (cadāmīşī); as such it is n.o.a.b., but it became a Second Period l.-w. in Mong. as cada (Haenisch 84) and found its way back into Turkish in this form and as yada (see Çağ.); s.i.s.m.l. in one form or the other. It has at one time or another been connected with 'jade' and Pe. cādū 'magic', but these are certainly errors. There is some evidence of the existence of a word in Sogdian, δδ, which might mean 'rain stone' (see Doerfer, op. cit.), but there is no reason to suppose that this is a l.-w. in Turkish, though the reverse might be the case. Uyğ. VIII ff. ?F?D ye:k 'demon, devil'; the old theory, which still has some support, is that this is a l.-w. fr. yakka, a Prakrit f. of Sanskrit yakşa 'demon'; as such this is improbable, yakşa itself occurs in TT VII 13, 55; 16, 17; but it might be a l.-w. fr. a Sogdian or Chinese transcription of the Sanskrit word. v.G. in TT VI, p. 61, note 131 put forward the more plausible theory that, since yek often occurs in the Hend. yek içgek, in which içgek is a Dev. N./A. in -ge:k (connoting habitual action) fr. iç- meaning 'constantly drinking', i.e. 'vampire', ye:k is a Dev. N. in -k (her theory that it is a crasis of ye:ge:k is improbable) fr. yé:- meaning '(constantly) eating', i.e. 'glutton'. The only objections to this theory are (1) that a Dev. N./A. fr. yé:- should be yé:k (cf. 2 yé:g), not ye:k; (2) that an actual l.-w. ye:k might well have been taken for such a Turkish Dev. N. and içgek devised to match it, in order to represent 'demons and vampires'. For 'demon' the word is now obsolete, displaced by Mong. l.-w.s in the NE and Ar. words like şayṭān, iblīs elsewhere, but survives as yek 'hateful, hostile' in NE Alt., Tel., çek in Şor, çék in Sag., ditto, and çe:k 'glutton' in Sag., R III 316–17, 1945. Türkü VIII ff. yek 'demon' in antithesis to teŋri 'god', and interchangeable w. şımnu:, q.v., is common in Chuas.; yek içgek do. 144–5: Uyğ. VIII ff. Of the other two texts the Cairo one seems preferable; the Fergana one is the same with -n- omitted. Arat took it to be a Den. V. fr. yalın and translated it 'caught fire'; this is possible but not very plausible since the Sec. f. yalıŋ is pec. to Osm. It therefore seems likely that it is a Den. V. fr. yalıŋ and that the phr. means 'his mind became stripped (of care)'.

VU yeme: (?yéme:) with takı:, q.v., one of the two copulas in early Turkish, used both at the beginning of the sentence, where it normally means 'and', and later, usually in the second place, where it means rather 'also, too'. In Syriac and Uyğ. script consistently spelt yme, which suggests that the first vowel was very short, but the evidence, where available, seems to point more to -é- than -e-. In the letter *Tun. yéni:- n.o.a.b.; apparently Intrans.: in the sense of 'to be, or become, light', cf. yénik; of Kaş.'s two etymologies the first is correct but inverted, the second impossible. Xak. XI ura:ğut yeni:di: 'the woman gave birth and laid down her burden' (walaḍat . . . wa waḍa'at ḥamlahā); this V. is used specifically (xāṣṣata(n)) of women only; in the case of other animals the name of the offspring (al-mawlūd) is taken and the Suff. -la:- is added to it to give the concept of parturition (al-nitāc), e.g. of a cow one says inge:k buza:ğu:-la:dı: 'the cow gave birth to a calf', buza:ğu: with Suff. -la:- (other examples follow). There are two possible etymologies (iştiyāq) of yeni:-; one is that it is derived fr. the phr. yenik ne:ŋ 'a light (al-xafīf) thing', and that when she laid down her burden she became light (xaffat), yeni:di: w. a kasra on the nūn, but the regular form for this meaning would have a ḍamma (i.e. yenü:di:; there is no good foundation for this statement). The other is that it is derived fr. yi:n 'a body' (al-badan) and that the woman, when she gave birth, ejected (axracat) a body (casad) from herself. Both theories are plausible (ḥasan) Kaş. III 91 (yéni:r (sic), yeni:me:k); bu: ura:ğut ol yéni:gü: (sic?, the MS. has ye/éne/inğü:) 'this woman is on the point of giving birth' (aşrafat 'alā'l-wilāda) III 36: KB boḍun asğı arttı yenip yükleri 'the people's benefits increased, their burdens becoming light' 1654.

?F yinçü 'pearl'; no doubt a l.-w. from some Chinese phr., but which is uncertain. The second syllable is presumably chu 'pearl' (Giles 2,549), but there seem to be insuperable phonetic objections to the theory in R III 339 that the word reproduces the phr. chên chu 'genuine pearl', even though it is quite a common one and actually occurs in the Chinese text of III, where chên chu ho 'genuine pearl river' occurs in a context which suggests that it is the same river as the yincü: öğüz in I, II, T (see G. D yartımlık Hap. leg.; A.N. fr. yartım. Türkü VIII ff. the letter *Tun. Between the two, and obviously referring to the first party, are the words yartımlık erür 'they are a separate party(?)'.

?C yértinçü 'the world', and more specifically 'this world', as opposed to heaven, hell, etc.; in TT VIII spelt yértinçö/yértınçö/yértönçö. It is suggested in the Indices to TT VIII and X, perhaps on the basis of the statement in Kow. 2368 that this word as a l.-w. in Mong. is the equivalent of Tibetan ḥjig-rten, that this is a Tibetan l.-w. This is open to several objections; (1) it assumes an eroded pronunciation of the Tibetan phr. which is improbable at this early date; (2) while ḥjig-rten, lit. 'receptacle of the perishable' is the standard Tibetan phr. for 'the external world', there is no trace in the dicts. of an extended phr. containing the equivalent of -çü: (-çö); (3) there are no known Tibetan l.-w.s in early Turkish and no evidence that the Indian Buddhist terminology in Turkish was obtained through any intermediaries other than Sogdian, Tokharian and, later, Chinese. The word is much more likely to be a purely Turkish compound w. yé:r as the first component. As regards the second it is perhaps significant that in TT I 91 (damaged) there is an antithesis between yérde and tonçudakı, and it is possible that the second element is tançu: 'a lump of earth', q.v. ya:ş (?ñ-) basically 'fresh, moist'; from this extended meanings developed: (1) 'fresh' to 'green vegetables'; (2) 'moist' to 'running with moisture; tears'; and perhaps also (3) 'fresh every year' to 'a year of one's life', but this might be a different word. There is no reasonable doubt that in the last sense it became an early l.-w. in Mong. as nasu 'a year of one's life'; the phr. harban niken nasutu 'eleven years old' (Haenisch 114) is exactly parallel to bir yégirmi: yaşlığ, same meaning; but the theory that Mong. nilbusu(n) 'tears' (actually a Dev. ya:y there is utter confusion in the Turkish languages about the words for 'spring' and 'summer'. Since ya:z, q.v., must originally have meant 'summer', ya:y must originally have meant 'spring', which is Kaş.'s translation in the main entry and is confirmed by its use in antithesis to kü:z 'autumn' in one passage. But yayla:-, q.v., always meant 'to spend the summer (somewhere)', and already in Kaş. ya:y is used for 'summer', in antithesis to kış 'winter,' in some verses. In modern languages the position is even more confusing; ya:z s.i.a.m.l., but ya:y has disappeared fr. some, and in others the meanings of the two words have become inverted.
