1 çîk- ‘to go out; to come out’. S.i.a.m.l.g. with a wide range of extended meanings esp. in SW. It is no doubt fortuitous that neither çık- nor çikar- are noted before xi. The theory propounded in Öğ. p. 27, note 27 that that is a crisis of taşık- is quite unconvincing. Xak. xi er evdin çıkdı: 'the man went out (xaraca) of the house (etc.)' Kas. çık- originally (of a bird) 'to swoop down (on something Diart.); to peck, 'peck out' with various extended meanings. S.i.a.m.lg.; the modern phonetics are confusing; it is nearly always lengthened to çök/çoku- (çok- çök- etc.) but in NC Kur. both çök- and çuki- occur with slightly different shades of meaning and in Kas. çok- and suk-. There do not seem to be any other genuine occurrences of -u- in the verb (both Uzb. -u- and Kaz. -u- represent earlier -o-) but there is what seems to be a Dev. N.A. in -r meaning 'hole, cavity, depression; hollowed out, deep' which first appears in Çağ. San. 214r. 6 and Kip. Id. 44; Tuḥ. 11b. 12; 12b. 11 and s.i.a.m.lg. as çukur (çukur, etc.). See Doerfer III 1099. This must surely be der. fr. this Verb; so too is SE Türk çokur 'pitted with small-pox', unless this is a Sec. f. of cotur. Uyg. vii ff. Bud. çakir 'blue, blue-grey' prob. originally of the eyes, later used more generally. S.i.s.m.1. In Osm. this word was also used, generally in the phr. çakir doğan, for 'the merlin, stone falcon, Hypotriorchis aseolion' fr. xv onwards; Osm. lexicographers generally consider that it is the same word, but it is almost certainly a corruption of Ar. açîr, which is itself a corruption of Latin vocer 'saker falcon'. See Doerfer III 1090. Xak. xi çakir al-arqaz 'blue-grey' Kaş. I 363 (prov., a grey (al-arqaz) dog is worth as much as a horse, but a wall-eyed (al-arqaz) horse is not worth as much as a dog): xiii(?) F çaxasə:pat, etc. the Sanskrit word śikṣapada became a l.-w. in Sogdian as ʃeq'pə, no doubt originally in translations of the Buddhist scriptures, and from Sogdian became a l.-w. in Turkish, usually with the same spelling except for the last letter. It was adopted by the Manichaean missionaries, with other Buddhist technical terms, to translate 'commandment', but in Buddhist terminology was often also used more vaguely to translate 'good behaviour', Sanskrit śila, see TT VI, p. 66, note 157; it was adopted, for some obscure reason, as the name of the 12th month of the Uyg. calendar, see Doerfer II, 627. çigîn/çîkîn Preliminary note. There is some confusion about words of this form. There was almost certainly in the medieval period a Dev. N. fr. çîg-, çîgin 'a knot' noted in XIV Rbg. R III 1958 (quotn.) and Cağ. XV ff. Vel. 242, although San. 220r. 24 says, rather unconvincingly, that this is a mistranslation. This word now seems to be obsolete. There was also a word çîgin meaning 'the upper part of the shoulder between the neck and the shoulder-blade' (Red.) (perhaps etymologically the same word in the sense of 'the part which ties the neck to the shoulder-blade') noted in Cağ. Vel. 242, San. 220r. 22, current in Osm. fr. the earliest period and still current there and in Tkm., and in Az. as çîlin. Kaş. lists two words of this form meaning respectively 'a kind of plant' and 'a kind of silk fabric'. San. has two parallel entries, but in each case quotes alternative forms with -e- in the first syllable, which suggests an original -e-. In the latter case the word survives with -i- so this is unlikely. In the former San. lists different plants with -k- and -g- in the middle. As no such plant names seem to survive, the number of plants involved, and the pronunciation, remain obscure.

D çalığ N.Ac. fr. çal-. In Kas. this word is entered not in its proper alphabetical order but as an appendage to soroğ; it is not, however, likely to be a later addition to the text. The only certain survival of this word is NE Alt. çalu: 'a shaman's drum' R III 1884. There are several medieval words assembled below which seem rather to represent a parallel (Pass.) Dev. N./A. in -uk, which survives in NE Alt., Tel. çalik 'enterprising (trader); unruly (horse); dangerous (disease)' R III 1880; SW Ösm. çalik with several meanings. PU çulîg this word has been read in Türkû vii I 4 5, II 5 in the list of countries which sent representatives to Estemi Xin'shî (?): funeral; it begins 'from the east, where the sun rises' Bükîl (PU) çulîg el Tavqûs Tûpût, etc. Henning in 'The Date of the Early Sogdian Letters', BSOAS XII 1901 ff. showed that Bükîl: meant 'Korea'. Tavqûs is of course 'China' and Tûpût 'Tibet'; as the list is presumably in a strict geographical order, the entry between Korea and China must be some unidentified 'realm' (el) between Korea and China, perhaps one of the several kingdoms in Korea. The word looks like a Chinese representation of the name like çili (g). It has been read as çûlîg and explained as a P.N.[A]. fr. çol meaning 'belonging to the steppes', but this is impossible since çol is a Mong. word which is not traceable as a l-w. in Turkish earlier than Çağ, xv ff. Vel. 252; San. 214v. 15. The word is perhaps to be connected with the equally unexplained word (PU) çulîg: in Tûrkû vii (1 searched for a guide and) çulîg: Azûlî: bulûdî T 23. Az is a tribal name (see az Preliminary note), so çulîg: is prob. a place-name. 'I found an Az man from Çulîg.' The suggested translations 'distant' and 'strange' are purely hypothetical since they do not rest on any solid etymological basis.

1 čár in the onomatopoecic jingle čár čur, which survives in SW Rep. Turkish in such phr. as čár čur et- 'to squander, dissipate'. The phr. was no doubt colloquial and is not noted in the Osm. dictes. See šar, which is said to be a Sec. f. of čar and is an onomatopoecic with a slightly different meaning. This entry is appended to that of šar, and so is out of its alphabetical position in the MS. Xak. xi one says ol čar čur yédlí: 'he eat everything that he found and left nothing' Kaş. I 323.

2 čar in the phr. čar čarmak which seems to be a mere jingle, perhaps in children's language; pec. to Kaş. Xak. xi 'young children' (al-daradidq-al-atin) are called čar čarmak Kaş. Ill 148; (between čarmak and čigruk) čar čarmak (al-daradíq to'lt-atin); one of them is a jingle (qi'dá) of the other; čarmak is an alternative form (luğa fihi) I 469.

1 čer Hap. leg.; it is hard to see what hikáya means here; it can hardly mean 'onomatopoecic', perhaps 'a word used only to form Den. V's. Cf. čerlét-, čerlen-. Xak. xi čer 'a hikáya for great bodily weight' ('an tülät-l-badán); hence one says čer čerletléd: 'the man's body was heavy' (taqla). A Xákání word Kaş. I 322.

2 čer Hap. leg.; 'time'; cf. bdj; it is possible that this was the Oğuz equivalent of bdj, which is not recorded in any Oğuz language except xx Anat., but if so it was displaced by l.-w.s like waq̪t and zaman at an early date. Oğuz xi čer al-waq̪t 'time', hence one says bu: čer-likde: kel 'come at this time' (i.e. 'now') Kaş. I 323.

3 čer (čer) Hap. leg.; it is prob. that this is merely an Oğuz form of yér 'place', and that Kaş. gave it this meaning owing to the erroneous belief that a word almost certainly older than the Oğuz sound-change y-> c-. Oğuz xi čer 'the opposite of something' (quabalatu-l-say); hence one says anip evli: bu: čerlikde: 'his house is opposite this thing' (tic, but ?his house is in this locality); hence čerlğ is used for 'the two battle ranks' (safiyyí-l-harb) because they confront one another (yataqbalan) Kaş. I 323.

1 čir an onomatopoecic; survives, with slightly different shades of meaning in NC Kir. čir and SW Osm. čir Red. 743 (only); it is possible that SW Osm. čir/čir 'sparrow' is an extended meaning of this word, and that the Çağ. word below has the same meaning. Xak. xi čir an onomatopoecic for the sound (al-sawt) produced by tearing (min mazq) a garment, etc.; hence one says anip tÖnči čir şyrít: 'he tore his garment with this sound' (mawatwa(l)n lahu) Kaş. I 323: Çağ. xv ff. čir 'the name of a bird which flies about in large flocks' (fawaw faww) San. 218r. 2 (quotn.).

VU 2 čir Hap. leg.; 'fat'; the words used to translate it suggest a rather more solid commodity than yazg; al-dasam seems to mean 'dripping' or more generally 'fat', al-sahm is usually 'suet', but al-simhad normally means 'the pericranial membrane', here perhaps more generally 'membrane', and al-samn is more usually 'clarified butter' than 'fat' proper. In the absence of any known connecting link the resemblance to Russian zhir 'fat, suet' is prob. a mere coincidence. Xak. xi čir 'fat' (al-dasam); one says esîçte: čir yokč 'there is no fat in the pot'; its origin is 'the membrane on suet' (al-simhad mînâl-sahm); hence one says bu: ette: čir yokč 'there is nothing in the way of suet or fat (pay) mînâl-sahm to'lt-samn on this meat' Kaş. I 323.

1 čör a Turkish title rather rare in Turkish texts and perhaps commoner in the Chinese records where it is represented by cho (Giles 2,421). It is stated in the Chiu T'ang Shu (see Liu Mau-tsai, Die chinesischen Nachrichten zur Geschichte der Ost-Türken (Tu-hieu), Wiesbaden, 1958, p. 158) that Kultuğ Xağan, before he became xâğan, was a hereditary todiün čör, and his brother, who became Kapğan Xağan, is always called by the Chinese Mo-cho (see op. cit., passim) which appears in Tibetan script as XBug-Cor, and perhaps represents *tögü: Çör. There is also a reference (op. cit., p. 170) to the Çör of the five To-lu (Töšis) tribes of the Left Wing of the Ten Tribes (i.e. the Western Türtü). A čör therefore seems to have been something less than a xâğan and more than a beg, perhaps the head of a small confederation, cf. elteber, 1 Irkin. As regards the pronunciation, the Middle Chinese pronunciation of cho, though uncertain, is likely to have been nearer chor than chur and the Tibetan transcription cor points in the same direction. Türkü vii (VU) Tadir Çör I E 32; Tarduş İnançu: Çör IN 13; Kül Çor the leader of the Tarduş ḏeğ S 13; İsvara: Tamçan Çor Yâbû: Ongin 4; Ix. is a memorial to Kül Çor and VU ċur: Pec. to Kaş. Xak. XI ċur: ċur 'an onomatopoeic for the sound of milk falling from theudder into the pail'; also used of any liquid when it makes a noise (savwata) Kaş. VU ċur: Hap. leg.; cf. astığ, which seems to have displaced this word completely. Cf. ċurleť-, ċurleń-: Xak. XI ċur: al-manfa'a 'advantage, profit' Kaş. I 323 (and see ċurle):.

PUD çasut the exact pronunciation (-ş- or -s-) is uncertain since the Uyg. script is ambiguous and the Kip. and Osm. forms may have been altered to conform to a supposed etymological connection with Ar. căsūs; the meaning too may have altered for the same reason. Active Dev. N. fr. *çaş-, cf. çasur-, q.v. The meaning in Uyg. can only be conjectured, but as both words are used in Hend. with yöga yöga: 'delation' or 'false accusation' seems the likeliest. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. (in a confession of sins; if I have spoken lies or) çasut yöga kiltim erser 'practised delation or false accusation' U II 76, 6; çasut çasudumız yönadımız erser TT IV 8, 71 v.l. tavar (d-) originally 'livestock', a meaning which comes out clearly in the phr. ed tavar 'inanimate and animate property' (see ed), and from an early date, since livestock was the commonest form of property in Turkish society, 'property' in general and even specifically 'merchandise, trade goods'. As Ar. ma'l is equally ambiguous, the exact meaning in some medieval texts is obscure. An early l.-w. in Mong. as tabar (Haemisch 143) and Russian as tovar, both in the second sense. The first was prob. reborrowed in NE Alt., Leb., Tel. tabar R III 966 and the second in several modern languages in the Soviet Union; but the word seems to survive genuinely in SE Türkî tavar 'silk goods, trade goods (generally)'; SC Uzb. tovar (perhaps the origin of the Russian word); NW Kk. tawar 'goods,' and SW Osm. davar 'livestock'. D tavış̃ Recip. f. of tav-; the only authority for the existence of these words is the passage in Kaş. below; it is perhaps significant that Kaş. uses tâşarrafa also in the translation of tevîr-, but apart fr. the difference in vocalization there are great difficulties about deriving tevîr-, with its close association with evîr- fr. tev- and the association between the two words is prob. fortuitous. It is equally difficult semantically to derive tavûs̄ fr. tav- Xak. xi (those two are constantly selling and buying (sâtîş̄an alîşan) merchandise, and in another dialect (lığâ) one says sâtîş̄an tavîş̄an, taken fr. the words sattî: bàa 'he sold', and tavîd̄: tâşarrafa 'he was in possession of' Kaş. tevse:, tûvse: Preliminary note. The vocalization of these V.s and their Der. f.s is chaotic; they should perhaps be reversed; tûvse- and its Pass. f. precede tevse- and its Pass. f. in the MS., but the Caus. f. of the latter precedes that of the former.

VUD tıvsel- Hap. leg.; Pass. f. of tıvse-; the colloaction with ıvşal- which is ultimately der. fr. ıvısı, confirms the theory that this verb, is der. fr. *tıvısı which, taking all the meanings together, seems to have meant ‘a small pellet, bead of sweat’ and the like. Xak. xi etmek usalıdı; teveldi; (teveli:-) ‘the bread (etc.) was crumbled’ (füt); usalıdı: is the main Verb (aşl) Kaş. II 235 (tıveselir, tıvselmek, spelt teveselir, teveselme:k).

tevey (d-) ‘camel’. There is real doubt about the original form of this word; the oldest recorded form is teve; but it became an early, First Period, L.-w. in Mong. as temeyen’temen (Haenisch 148; Studies, p. 234) which presupposes a final -y. Kaş.‘s main entry, III 225, is spelt clearly tevey and occurs in a Section headed ‘fa‘al, fa‘il, fa‘ul with various vowels on the second consonant’, the third being alif, wâda or yâd’. Nearly all the words in the Section end with long open vowels, e.g. tapan; tapi: and it could be argued that tevey was intended to be an ‘Arabic’ spelling of teve: like ma‘nâ, which also has a final yâ, but this is improbable in itself and inconsistent with the simultaneous spelling of the Oğuz form deve: with final alif. It seems clear therefore that Kaş. meant the word to be pronounced tevey, and this was prob. the original form. S.i.a.m.l.g.; see Shcherbak, p. 193; the NW tet-, tid-, tit-, tit- Preliminary note. It is reasonably clear how many Verbs of each of these forms there are, but, as they are usually graphically indistinguishable, it is often difficult, and in damaged passages like U III 25, 15 (i) and TT III 112 impossible, to determine which Verb is concerned.

1) I tett- (d-) Caus. f. of tet- with the idiomatic use of Caus. as Pass.; 'to be said to be, to be called'; almost always in the form tettir 'is said to be, is called'. Pec. to Uyğ. uyğ. vii ff. Man. eddī tētik nomluğ [ertinig] 'the precious doctrine called "good"' TT III 108: Bud. tetir is very common in texts like TT V 4 ff., e.g. tiz yokaru belke tegl siv ulug tetir 'from the knee up to the waist (the element of) water is said to be predominant' do. 4. 4; o.o. 2 tett- (tett-) pec. to Xak., but cf. tetik, tettik, tettfn, tetttrù; it is difficult to fit the first two in semantically with the rest, and they may be derived fr. some other V., perhaps *tettli-. Xak. xi kul begke: tetli: the slave resisted (or opposed, qâwama) the beg (followed by two illustrations of tettrî): Kaş. VU 2 tit- (?tttt-) 'to ache, throb'; pec. to Kaş. where it occurs twice in different spellings. The main entry opens the list of words of this form, is vocalized with ðamma and has the Inf in -nak, but the Dev. N. is vocalized with karsa and ends in -lg. The -lg can hardly be a mistake and, since Infinitives tend to be erratic, it can be taken as certain that this V. had a front vowel, but the position of the main entry before tut- suggests that the đama is correct and the word may have been töṭ- or tüt-. Xak. xi baș tötti(:?) 'the wound ache (amađda) because of a blow' Kaş. II 291 (töttir; töttmek spelt -ma:k); one says baș tittig tötti: 'the wound made a great deal (amađda ayya imđal) I 386.

D tatâr (in Kaq. under the heading fâ'id) Dev. N. fr. tat- (tat-) rather than tatâr- 'taste, flavour', often with the implication of 'a pleasant taste'. This is the only form of this word in the early period and it still survives as tatu: in NE, NC, but fr. the medieval period a syn. word tat appeared, which survives in all other language groups. 'There is no good reason for supposing that it is a really old word. Uygh. vii ff. Man.-A tataq M III 12, 17 (1) (1 teq): Bud. in Bud. terminology tarîq 'taste' is normally the fourth of the six senses, see TT VI 174 ff.; U III 37, 30-1 (1 açig)—in Swu. 118, 7 tataq must mean concretely 'tasty food', (if any are suffering from hunger and thirst) adruk adruk taq taq taq taq taqlar üze tojgurdaçi bolayim 'I will be the one who satisfies them with various wonderful (Hend.) tasty foods'—in Swu. 590, 23 ff. the seven uçus of the body are enumerated as 'flesh, blood, tutûq, skin, bone, marrow, and oluk(?); this seems to be an error for tudû: Cív. tutâtqlar bûtûkle taydı têir 'it is called a support for the preparation of tasty foods' TT I 191; o.o. do. 187, 199: Xak. xi tataq al-ladja 'a pleasant taste', one says in a jingle (fi'l-tzûdîke) tataq tataq Kaq. As pointed out in Doerfer II 874, where numerous occurrences of this word are collected, the correct transcription is totoğ and not tutuğ, as it has usually been transcribed, but see tutuğ. VU?D tûdûn n.o.a.b. For the description in Kaš. cf. tûrk; in a Section in Kaš. headed fâ'il together with tâjûn and tôdûn. If tûdûn could be taken as an error for -d- this might be an Abîl. of tû, with which there is some semantic connection. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. (if a man, because he does not understand this, takes entirely different views) aza ters têtûrî (PU) tîjaz çânîd nomlûsar 'or preaches errors at inappropriate times' (? ) TT VI 195 (one of several v.l. of this para.; the translation is purely hypothetical, but it is hard to see any alternative): Xak. xi tôdûn (sic, but an error under fâ'il) har yunubi 'anî-ri-waqît 'a Particle connoting time'; hence one says bu: tôdûn (sic) keldî: cêä'î mişî hâdash-l-waqît 'he came at about this time' Kaš. III 171.

tôdûn (hitherto transcribed tâjûn, but the Chinese transcription indicates tôdûn, cf. totok); a Türk title of office. It occurs fairly frequently in Chinese records regarding the Türkû, where it is spelt t'ô (Giles 12, 100 12, 232; Pulleyblank, Middle Chinese tou dûn), see Chavannes, Documents sur les Tou-hu (Turcs) occidentaux, St. Petersburg, 1900, Index s.v. t'ou-touen and toudoun. In the list of Turkish offices in the Chu T'ang Shu, Chap. 194b. (Chavannes, p. 21) the t'û-t'un occupies the 7th place, coming after the hsieh-li-fa (êlîteber); when T'ûn Yâvû, who was the Western Türkû xâqân in the first quarter of the 7th century, conquered foreign countries he gave his rulers the title of êlîteber, but sent a tôdûn to supervise them and collect the taxes (Chavannes, p. 24); the word appears in these records, as an element either first or second, in P.N.s. e.g. T'ûng tôdûn and Tôdûn Şad (Chavannes, Index). By xi the office had obviously lost importance. N.o.a.b. in Turkish texts. See Doerfer III 1194. Türkû viii tôdûn (VU) Yamtarîg (tûjûm 'I sent the tôdûn Yamtar' (telling him 'attack the Karluk to the south') I E 42; Kûl Tođûn inisi: 'younger brother of Kûl Tođûn' Ise-Assete a.1; b.1 (ETY II 121-2): viii ff. F tuğ ‘a royal emblem’, that is essentially some kind of drum or standard; in the early period it is not easy to decide which is meant. Acc. to Kaş. the standard was a silk flag (no doubt an idea derived fr. China), but the traditional Turkish standard was a horse’s tail or a bunch of horsehair. No doubt a 1.-w. fr. Chinese tu ‘banner, standard’ (Giles 12,956; Pulleyblank, Middle Chinese dok), see Doerfer II 969; the vowel in Chinese was originally -a- and became -u- at some date which is uncertain but presumably before the Turks borrowed the word, since there is no evidence of a pronunciation toğ in Turkish; on the other hand in the case of totok, which occurs in Tibetan as todog (see Doerfer II 874), the borrowing prob. occurred before similar sound changes took place in this word. An early 1.-w. in Mong. as tuğ (Haensch 153); s.i.a.m.l.g. as tuğ/tuw (NW Kk./ltu: Uyg. viii (I said ‘let us start a campaign’) tuğ taşkar erikili: ‘just as the standard was setting out’ Şu. This is in accordance with the rule, which is that if a verb is a Caus. f. without the attachment of -t (îlhamî-l-ta’d) then when a -t- is attached to it it makes it Causative in such a way that the Object (al-ma’îl) is operated upon by two Subjects (al-fâ’îl), one of whom gives an order and the other performs an act; for example suyu içürdi: apâlâbî-l-mâ ‘he gave (someone) a drink of water’, but if one says suyu içürdi: (sic, but ? içürtdi: in the original text) it means ‘he ordered someone else to give (someone) a drink of water’; again ol anî: boğdu: means ‘he strangled him’, but if one says boğurdu: it means ‘he ordered someone else to strangle him’; there is the same difference of meaning in Ar. between laqâta and alqâta and naqâta and anaqâta, where the addition of a makes the verb Causative with both the Subjects (fâlîl) operating on the Object Kaz. II 173 (tuğturur, tuğurmak; MS. boşturur, boşgurmak; it is probable that it was a copyist, and not the author, who made nonsense of this para.; the translations of içür- and içür- are identical in Kaz.; there is no other trace of içür-; which is clearly the form required by the words ida ułuqat bihlî-l-ta’d).”

Vu2/1 D toğra: primera facie a Dev. N. fr.
toğra-, but with no obvious semantic connection; spelt toqøa: in the MS, but this must be an error since the Refl. Den. V.s of this word, q.v., and tuqøa: are dealt with together in one para. Pec. to Kaš. Xak. xi toğra: ‘any tokuz (d-) ‘nine’. There is no doubt that this word and some other numerals originally had a medial double consonant, see Clausen, ‘The Turkish Numerals’, JRAS, 1959, p. 20, and this double consonant would not have been written in the Runic or Uyğ. scripts. teğ (d-): Postposn. 'like'; together with üçün, üze: and birle: one of the 'four old postposns.' discussed in K. Gronbech, Der türkische Sprachbau, Copenhagen, 1936, p. 35. When attached to the oblique stem of 0 it soon became fused with it as antaq, q.v.; later it became similarly fused with the oblique stem of I bu: S.i.a.m.l.g. except SW where it is replaced by other words like noğl (kb): the vowel varies between e- and a-, and the final between e- and y, but the initial is consistently d- everywhere. Tek Preliminary note. There was certainly a word tek meaning 'only', which is not mentioned in this meaning by Kaş; it seems likely, however, that his translation 'for no particular purpose' is a misunderstanding of it. There was also certainly a word tek meaning 'silent ly') which is generally used to qualify tur-, and must be carefully distinguished from tik which is similarly used. There is a modern word in NC Kzx. teg/tek 'family, origin', which Radioff, certainly in error, read in some early texts; in Türkü vii ff. Yen. Mal. 28, t the correct reading is prob. teğme: 'all'; in Xak. x KB the readings are all due to scribal errors in the Vienna MS., in 344 akran teki for evren başi; in 950 tegin for tepin and in 1630 teginde for beğinde. A word tek 'under' first mentioned in Çav. xv ff. San. 157v. 24 and surviving in several modern languages looks like a corruption of Ar. taht, which is the word used to translate it in San.

1 Tek 'only': survives with some extended meanings, 'alone, solitary, odd (not even) in NC Kzx., several NW languages and SW Az., Osm., Tkm. Uyğ., viii ff. TF tik (d-): 'straight; vertical, upright'; hence of a cliff' precipitous and the like. S.i.a.m.l.g. except NE?; in SW Az., Osm., Tkm. dik; almost the only word in Kaş, which preserves the original d-. A 1-w. in Pe., Doerfer II 105. As he points out, practically syn. w. Chinese chih (Giles, 1,846, Fulleblank, Middle Chinese ejak), and prob. a 1-w. fr. it. Its relationship to Mong. pike (Kone. 2175) is obscure, on balance it is perhaps more likely to be a 1-w. fr. Turkish than direct fr. Chinese, although the unvoiced initial and the fact that the Mong. word has Sec. meanings peculiar to Chinese point rather in the other direction. Xak. xi when a thing is vertical (idê'nata-ba'lt-yay' qâ'ima(n)) one says dik turdi: Kaş. I 334: xiii(?). (F) teğin (or ? teğin) a very old title, like tarxan, q.v., inherited fr. some earlier non-Turkish language, as shown by the fact that it had the non-Turkish Pl. f. teğit, q.v. in the Türkü period it meant 'prince' in the limited specific sense of 'a son, or grandson, of a ruling xağan'; after that period it was used in a much less restricted sense as a title of honour of diminishing importance, but did not survive the Mongolian invasion. Its history is discussed at great length in Doerfer II 922 (which contains some errors) and more briefly in Bosworth and Clawson, 'al-Xwarazmī on the Peoples of Central Asia', JRAS, 1965, p. 7. It is noteworthy that both Kəş. and San. give wholly erroneous accounts of its origin. Türkü viii the prince commemorated in I was Kül Təğin, younger son of Eltəris Xağan; both I and II were drafted by Yolluq Təğin, the att: ('grandson or nephew) of Bilge Xağan (see I S 13; SW; II SW) who was himself a teğin (see IE 17, II E 14) when his uncle succeeded his father as xağan; four təğinss attended the funeral of Kül Cór Ix. 24: Uyğ. viii Ozmiş Təğin xan bolmiş 'Ozmiş Təğin became xan'. Şu. N 9 (N.B. the last Türkü xağan): viii ff. Man. M III 14, 3 (iii) (✍']; Bud. the two royal princes in PP were called Edğul oglı teğin and Ayğ oglı teğin; Teğrken Kutluğ Bars Təğin P.N. Kir. ix ff. er atım Yaruk Təğin 'my adult name was Yaruk Təğin' Mal. 15, 1 (not a royal prince): Xak. x1 təğin in its original meaning (fi aşıl'il-luğa) 'a slave' (al-'abd); hence one says kümüş təğin 'a slave of faultless colouring like silver', alp təğin 'a robust (calad) slave' and kutluğ təğin 'a blessed (mubārak) slave'. Then this noun was made an exclusive appellation (simə mahda) for the sons of the Xağans and is combined with the names of birds of prey, e.g. Çağrı: təğin, that is 'a prince (təğin) with the strength of a falcon' (al-bażət); kůch təğin 'strong prince'. This name was transferred from slaves (al-mawālī) to the sons of Afrasiyāb because they respected their fathers and whenever they addressed or wrote to them they said or wrote 'your slave has done so-and-so' deprecating themselves and exalting their fathers. After that they were known specially by this name; but the word remained as the name of a slave when it was combined with something which was clearly distinguished from them (i.e. princely names) Kəş. I 413; o.o. I 355 (təğit); 357 (beğes); III 368 (topa): (KB kayusi təğin beg, 4068, is an erroneous conjecture by Arat; the MSS. indicate rather kayusi kūl erkın): xiv Muh. (!) DIS. DLD

D töleć no.a.b.; the context suggests the meaning 'cushion' or the like; apparently a Dev. N.; there is obviously no semantic connection with 1 or 2 töleć, and the word seems rather to be derived fr. *tölê: as an ilr form of töleç-, cf. tüllüsg Uyg. viii ff. Bud. (food to eat, clothes to wear) olurğuluk orunin töletin töşekin 'a seat, cushions, and mattress to sit on' Sum. 513, 13; a.o. TT VIII D.12 (orun).

D tildağ/tiltçağ (d-) Dev. N. fr. tilda-; prob. with -It- in Uyg. and -Id- later; the meaning is very elusive; in some Uyg. passages 'cause, reason' suits the context best, in others perhaps 'pretext', which is nearer the etymological meaning of tilda-: N.o.a.b. but NE Tob. tildak 'eloquent', R III 1333, seems to be a parallel Dev. N./A. in -k. Became an early l.-w. in Mong. as tildağ/tilda (< *tildağ) 'cause, reason' (Haenisch 140); this word was then reborrowed in this form but with meanings more akin to those in Xak., in Çağ. (San. 262v. 3), Kom. (tiltçev CCG; Gr. 228) and various modern languages, as well as in Pe. and other foreign languages, see Doerfer II 236. Uyg. viii ff. Man. in TT IX Tokharistan tu sa 'thereupon, therefore' is variously translated ann, anüze and (l. 32) ol tildağ üze: Chr. ol uğurka bügün (sic) künkeli nöçoqlar okta tapınmak tildağ bu euri 'therefore this is the reason for which the Magi worship fire down to the present day' U I 9, 3-5: Bud. tildağ 'cause, reason' is common, e.g. Sanskrit sūktaheta 'because of the good preaching' edgü (etkid) nom tiltçağnda: TT VIII D.5; o.o. do. D töleć- (d-) Caus. f. of tilç-; s.i.s.m.l. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. biziğ kut tiltelit yarlıkap 'deigning to order that the favour of heaven should be sought for us' Usp. 88, 13: Xak. xi ol anu: tilteli: 'he ordered someone to seek him' (yaftubaho, so he searched for him (faftaqadahu) Kaş. II 310 (tilletür, tintek): Çağ. xv ff. tiltel- Caus. f. palabandin 'to order to seek or summon (someone)' Snn. 190v. 8 (quotn.).

D töleć- (d-) Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of 1 töle-: Kaş's explanation of the origin of the word would be applicable to a Caus. f. of töle-: either he confused the two words or some words have fallen out. Oğuz xi ol ko yöltelti: nataenti'l-gamam (error for nataca) 'he helped the ewe to lamb'; aşıulu iştâl-i-ağam minel-sa'r 'its origin is making the hair fall out' Kaş. II 310 (tilletür, tintek).

D tildağ/tiltçağ: (d-) Den. V. fr. til; regarding the phonetics see tildağ; etymologically this should mean 'to make the tongue', but in practice it seems usually to mean 'to make excuses, to seek pretexts', and the like. Survives only (?) in NC Kır. tilde- to abuse. Uyg. viii ff. Civ. Qutb 192: Kom. xiv tiltçagan söz 'a false statement' CCG; Gr.

VU?D töleć- Hap. leg.; perhaps Den. V. fr. töle which could mean 'to provide with cushions'. Uyg. viii ff. Man. Wind. 34-5 (èt-).

D tiltan- (d-) Hap. leg.; Refl. f. of tiltçağ; perhaps 'to make (something Dat.) an excuse'. Türkii vii ff. Man. Chuas. 267 (l. 18).

D talkur- (d-) Caus. f. of tal-; s.i.s.m.l., usually as taldur- 'to tire out, exhaust', but SW Osm. daldur- means 'to plunge (something Acc.) into water'. Xak. xi ol an: urup talkurdi: 'he beat him until he almost fainted' (hāda an yuqāy alayhi) Kaş. II 174 (talturur, talturmak).

D teltur- (d-) Caus. f. of tel-; survives in SW Osm. deldir-. Xak. xi ol ta:mm teltürdi: 'he ordered the piercing (bi:tąq) of the wall' (etc.); the second tă' is changed from dāl (MS. lâm), as they say in Ar. qatara and qadara with the same meaning (quotns.); a dāl may be changed from tă', and a tă' (MS. hā) from dāl (quotns.) Kaş. II 174 (teltürur, teltürmek).

D tiltür- (d-) Caus. f. of til-; s.i.s.m.l.g., usually as tildur-. Tildür in Kaş follows taldur- so presumably belongs here, although semantically it is nearer teltür-, but the text is in some disorder and it is followed by bitltür-, tumtur-, etc.; the scribe was obviously confused between -t- and -d-, but bitltür- is misplaced in any event. Xak. xi er yarindaq tilitültüd: 'the man ordered that a strap (lit. strip) should be cut' (br-qaddal-gidd); also used of anything when it has been cut in strips (qadda), e.g. leather, and the like Kağ. II 175 (tilitur, tiltürmek): (ol) ani: biçek bile: tildürd: 'he stabbed him (reca-aahu; ?read reca-aahu 'had him stabbed') with a knife' II 176 (tilitur, tiltürmek).

D toltur- (d) Caus. of f. tostl; 'to fill'. S.i.m.m.l.g.; in SW Az., Osm. doldur-; Tkm. doldur-. Xak. xi ol ayak tolturdu: 'he filled (ama-la) the cup' (etc.) Kağ. II 175 (tolturul, tolturmak): xiii(7) Tef. tolturul- 'to fill' 308: xiv Muh.(?) ama-la toltur- Rif. 104 (only): Çağ. xv ff. toltur- Caus. f.; pur kardan 'to fill' Sam. 183v 4 (quoting): Kom. xiv ditto toltur- CCG; Gr. 249q (quoting): Kip. xiv toltur- mala-a 1d. 65; mala-a doldur- (once toltur-) Bul. 80v; xv mala-a toltur-'with two ts; some people pronounce it with two ds Kaş. 74, 1; mala-a toltur- Tuh. 35b. 8.

VUD tuldur- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of tulur-. Xak. xi atılıg ann. tuldurdu: 'the houseman (etc.) collided with him' (fadama buhu) Kağ. II 175 (no Aor. or İnf.)

PUD tältür- Hap. leg.; the passage occurs in a list of the unpleasant results of sin; the spelling is quite clear in the MS.; v. l. C. suggests that it means 'to make (someone) dream', connecting it with tül, this is possible only by assuming a homophonous V. and N. of this form, but there is no other trace of VU *tül- or this verb, and no convincing sense is given by assuming that either this word or tildür- is mis-spelt. Uyg. viii ff. Man. tüş üze olurup (so read) tildürür (the demons) 'sit on your chest and ...' M 117, 12-13.

VUD toldur- Hap. leg.; this verb is listed in a Chapter devoted to disyllables, in a small section containing three other verbs all of which are onomatopoecies; the vocalization is chaotic; in the case of this verb the l and d carry cozms in the Perf. but are unmarked in the other tenses; in the case of the other verbs the third consonant usually carries a hasra, but this seems to be an error. Prima facie a Den. V. fr. *toldur, possibly onomatopoetic 'to clatter away' or the like. Öğuz xi boyn (mis-spelt to) toldrud: tafarraqal-näs min kull cánib 'the people scattered in every direction' Kaş. III 447 (toldrăr, toldrămák).

D tilak (d-) Dim. f. of til; 'the clitoris'. Survives in SW Osm. dilek and prob. all modern language groups, but the kind of word often omitted fr. dict.s.; l.-w. in Pe., see Doerfer II 925. Çiygil xi tilak matul'l-mar'a 'clitoris' Kaş. TTS II 292, 893; IV 217.

D tillğ P.N./A. fr. til; 'having a tongue'. S.i.m.m.l.g. usually w. a preceding qualifying Adj., 'having a ... tongue'; but tillğ in some NE languages means 'eloquent' and SW Az., Osm., Tkm. dilek 'gliv, voluble'. Xak. xi yavlaq tillğ bég 'a foul-mouthed husband' Kaş. III 133, 15; n.m.e.: xiv Muş. al-fash 'eloquent' (opposite to 'stammering) til:isli:z) dilek: Mel. 55, 11; tillğ Rif. 153; a.o. do. 150 (oğlilğ): Xwar. xiv tillğ/tilli 'having a ... tongue' Quth 179.

VUD tuluk Hap. leg.; the meaning can only be conjectured; the editors suggest a connection with modern words of similar form meaning 'wine-skin' and the like, no doubt der. fr. tosl-, but this is not very plausible; the meaning seems rather 'barrier', or the like, which is a possible meaning for a Pass. Dev. N./A fr. tul-. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. (when a murderer is reborn in hell, the lords of hell lay him face downwards on a surface of red-hot iron) üzesinde yalımlayu turur yönün tuluklar tegresinde tokıp anıp içinde baturalar 'they fasten thick barriers (?) constantly flaming on the top round him and lower him within them' TM IV 252, 34 ff.

D talku: prob. a crisis of *talkgu: Dev. N. fr. talk-; survives in NE Tel. talku; NC Kir. ditto; Kxz. talki; NW Káz., Nog. ditto 'an instrument for working leather while it is being tanned'. It is difficult to see the semantic connection of the Xak. word with this, but it is connected with the meanings of other der. f.s. Xak. xi anything 'spun or twisted' (maftul mudaltvar) is called talku; hence a 'twisted cord' is called talku: yıstiğ. Kaş. I 427.

D talgu:ç Hap. leg.; abbreviation of *talkgu: N.I. fr. talk-; 'a toggle' and the like. Xak. xi talgu:ç 'the name of the piece of wood (al-xapaba) which is inserted between a package (al-çid) and the cord (round it)'; the cord is twisted several times (yuftal . . . fatalat), until the cord is stretched (yumnad) and the load secured (yaftadd), so that the package cannot shift (tâ yu' atrace) Kaş. I 453.

D talkû Dev. N. fr. talk-; n.o.a.b. Xak. xi talkû mustadimu:-l-hibal (so read, MS. cibal) 'tension(?) of cords'; talkû ta'viqul-umur 'a business complication' Kaş. I 463.

D talgu:ç abbreviation of *talkgu:k N.I. fr. talk-; n.o.a.b. Uyğ. viii ff. terkin bêz yüz talgu:karîq anutqlı quickly prepare the 500 iron nails' U III 47, 9: Xak. xi talgu:ç 'the peg (or tang, al-taviti) which is inserted in the handle (maqbad) of a spade or axe, so that the (spade or) axe-head can be secured (yastadd) to it' Kaş. I 469.

D tolga:ç (d-): Dev. N. fr. tolga:-; lit. 'twisting, something twisted', and the like; Kaş. give three meanings; in the third 'snow-storm' it is vocalized talga:ç; this meaning is not found elsewhere, but there is no reasonable doubt that it is the same word in the sense of 'something swirling'. It is possible that the Uyğ. word was a parallel Der. N. in -k, tolgak, which would have the same meaning, and most modern forms seem to go back to this word rather than tolga:ç; they include NE Şor tolgak; Khak. tolgax; Tuv. dolgak 'twisted, intertwined,' and the like; SE Türkî tolgak 'birth pangs'; NC Kir. tolgo:/tolgok ditto, and 'the act of twisting; pressing, urgent' Kxz. tolgak ditto; SC Uzb. tolgak 'birth pangs'; NW Kh., Nog. tolgak ditto; SW Az. dolaga; Osm., Türk. dolgak 'puttees'. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. tolga:ç (or tolgak?) 'pain, distress', occurs both by itself, e.g. ayig adaliq tolga:ç 'evil, dangerous pain' USP. 90 II b. 10, and in lists of near synonyms, e.g. ig kem sikig tanq ada tuda tolgaglarinda 'in diseases (Hend.), constrictions (Hend.), dangers (Hend.), and pains' U II 73, 2 (iii) ff.; and in Priv. N.A. form e.g. emgeksiz tolgasiz 'without pain' TT VI 280: Cîv. tolgag bolup sömenser 'if a man has colic (?) and it is not relieved' H I 44; Xak. xi tolgag sanaful-mar'a 'a woman's earring'; hence one says yincü: tolga:ç 'a pearl earring'; tolga:ç almîma 'pain'; hence one says emgek tolgag originally al-zahir wâl-qunine 'dysentery, colic'; hence one says annî karmî: tolgag 'he has an attack of dysentery and diarrhea' (al-hayda): tolga:ç (apparently tolga:ç corrected to tolga:ç) 'a snowstorm (al-damaq) which takes a man by surprise' (yuqgîl'îs-sîn) so that it nearly kills him; hence one says taqg üze: tolga:ç (spelt tolga:ç) boldî: 'a snowstorm arose (qâma) on the mountain' Kaş. VUD tolgar- Pec. to Kaş.; the vocalization and etymology of this verb are most obscure; of the six occurrences the first syllable is vocalized tal- six times with the alternative (two vowel signs) tol- once, nevertheless considering the meanings tol- is almost certainly right; the second syllable is -gür- four times and -gir- twice. The word can hardly be a Caus. f. since it is Intrans., and the likeliest explanation is that tolgar- is a Trans. Den. V. and this verb an Intrans. Den. V. from tolgî where it is clear that the correct form of this word should be tolgar-. Xak. xi köplüm tolgardi: 'my constitution (mafsî) was almost thoroughly upset (read tatamaraowac for tataharaowac in MS.) when it was revolted (loqisat) by eating putrid food' (tolgarur, tolgarmak); art baş: tolgard: 'a snowstorm rose (gâmatıl-l-damaq) over the head of the pass' (etc.) Kaş. Vu(?D) I tulum the only meaning in Xak. is 'weapons, military equipment'; fr. the medieval period onwards the only meaning, except when it is a Sec. f. of tuluq, is 'a skin container, inflated skin used as a float', etc. It is, of course, poss. but not very likely that these are two different words. In both cases the word might semantically be regarded as a N.S.A. fr. tol-, but it is consistently pronounced tulum in all the modern languages in which it survives and is a 1.-w. in this form and the second meaning in Mong. (Kou. 1855, Haltod 431). The evidence against any connection with tol- seems to be overwhelming, but there is no semantic connection w. tul-.

F talu y (¿d-) originally specifically 'the sea', later used for any large body of water. A Chinese l.-w. In 'Nachvorte zur Inschrift von Tonjukuk' (in Radloff, Die alttürkischen Inschriften von Mongolei, zweite Folge, St-Petersbourg, 1899) p. 18, Hirth made the plausible suggestion that it represented the Chinese phr. ta 'great' (Giles 10,470) and lei (Giles 6,843 w. the 'water radical' attached). This lei (Middle Chinese lyui i.e. 'shi') was a medieval name of the Sang-kan River in Chih-li (NE China) down which the Türtü advanced in their raids towards the sea in late viii. As they had never before approached the sea they may well have thought that it was the Great Lui River. An early l.-w. in Mong. as dalay (Haensch 31) perhaps borrowed direct fr. Chinese. 1 tamıga: an old word ending in -ğa; not semantically connected with 2 tamğı; originally a 'brand' or mark of ownership placed on horses, cattle, and other livestock; it became at a very early date something like a European coat of arms or crest, and as such appears at the head of several Türkül and many O. Kir. funerary monuments, see L. P. Kyzlasov, 'Novaya datirovka yeniseiskoj pis'mennosti' (Sovetskaya arkeologiya, 1960, III) and 'O datirovke pannyatnikov yeniseiskoj pis'mennosti' (do. 1965, III). It was the word used for a Chinese 'seal' and passed into Mong. in this meaning as tamğa (Keva. 1643). S. i. a. m. i. g. w. some phonetic variations; in SW Az., Osm. damğa; Tkm. tagma; a l.w. in Pe. and other foreign languages, see Doerfer II 933, where the word is discussed at great length. VUD D 1 tomur- (of the nose, etc.) 'to bleed'; n.o.a.b. This meaning would be very appropriate for a Caus. f. of tam-, and it is tempting to regard this as a Sec. f. of *tamur-, particularly since the word is occasionally so vocalized in Kaş., but there is no doubt that the first vowel was rounded, and a sound change -a > -o- is unlikely at this period even before -m-. The first vowel is uncertain; SW Osm. tomuruk 'a bud; a budger; a lump of wood' seems to be a Pass. Dev. N/A. fr. it, and this, taken with the Tel. V. would point to -o-, but in Osm. VU 3 tao onomatopoeic in the phr. tao toj; pec. to Kaž. The vowel in the main entry is daq, but see daj. Xak. xi tao (or to?) toj etti 'the heavy thing made a noise (taşawwota) when it fell on a solid object' Kaž. III 35; a.o. III 357 (daq).

VU 4 tao (tęń) Hap. leg.; the vowel is fatha, but this word comes after i and 2 toj where damma or kasra might be expected; perhaps a l.-w. Xak. xi tao 'any building (bind)' which once existed, of which the superstructure (MS. 'amātuhi, ? read 'maratuhu') has disappeared and the foundations (ašluhi) remain as a high mound (tall); it is the foundations of any ancient town (MS. qhandar, read qhandiz) and the like Kaž. III 356.

VF 5 tao Hap. leg.: almost certainly a l.-w.; 'sieve' is normally elegek. Argü: xi tao bi'l-iḫḫa 'with a back vowel', al-munxul 'a sieve' Kaž. III 355.

VUF 6 tao occurs several times in commercial documents in Uyg. viii ff. Civ. as a measure of capacity for stored cotton; it must have been a fairly large measure since in Uṣp. 2 the rest of a piece of ground for growing cotton was 'ten tao kebez', and Uṣp. 70, 6 (būtīlir-) relates to a transaction involving borrowing four tao kebez in the spring and returning seven in the autumn. Perhaps to be connected with Pe. tao a 'donkey load', but this word also means 'half a load', and in this sense looks like a l.-w. fr. 1 tēq, q.v. It is, however, unlikely that 1 tēq should be read in these Uyg. passages.

1 tēq (d.-) basically 'equal' (to something else), hence 'equivalent' (to something else) and, of the two pans on a pair of scales 'level' (equal to one another). S.i.a.m.l.g.; in NE Tuv.; SW Osm., Tkm. deg. A l.-w. in various foreign languages including Pe. see Doerfer II 941 where in the forms tao/dang it acquired the special meaning of 'half a load' on an animal's back (i.e. one equal to the other half), hence more generally 'a load, or package'. With these forms and meanings these Pe. words were reborrowed by some modern Turkish languages, e.g. Rep., Turkish denk. While there is no reasonable doubt that the Chinese word tēng was a l.-w. in some early languages, see 2 tēq, the theory that it was also the origin of this word (see Doerfer, loc. cit.) is untenable since the meanings are quite different. Türkî viii ff. Yen. yağı[kan] tēmkis sū tēq: bīn oğlan ert'e 'the (size of the) army which attacked the enemy was equal to seven thousand young men' Mal. 26, 8.; būyun tēqin bīl-r ert'e 'he knew the value (?) of the people' dn. 32, 3 (both readings very dubious): Uyg. viii ff. F 2 tēq a word which seems to mean 'kind, sort' occurs in several early texts. It is plausibly suggested in TT VI, p. 90, a.v. tēq, that in these passages it is a l.-w. fr. the synonymous Chinese word tēng (Gilet 10,877). The following passages seem the clearest cases of this word, but there are prob. others where it has been mistaken for 2 teğ and thus transcribed. Türkül viii ff. Man. ZT II 8, 58 (oyun); Uyg. vii ff. Bud. teğ adıncığ terteni yıncığ 'various kinds of jewels and pearls' PP 34, 1–2; a.o. of teğ adıncığ do. 71, 5; Kuan. 149.

E 3 teğ a word so transcribed and translated 'marsh(?)' (Brockelmann), 'lake' (Atalay) has been read in a verse in Kaş. I 528, 9–10; it is not vocalized; it is very unlikely that a word with this meaning should be a Hap. leg. Kaş's translation of the verse is 'it describes wild fowling and says "when the goose (should be "duck") saw me in that pool (al-gudar) with a blunt arrow, this bird (the kaşgalak) dived into the water'.' It will be noticed that the last word of the first line (ataş in the MS.) is not translated. The likeliest explanation is that al-gudar is a scribal error for al-gudâ and that the verse read tapda: bîle: körse: menî: örde ôter kalva: körûp kaşgalakî suvka: batar 'the duck seeing me at dawn quacks; the kaşgalak seeing (my) blunt arrow dives into the water'.

tîn (d-) Kaş has two main entries tîn 'breath' and tîn 'rest', but it is unlikely that the distinction in length is semantically valid since else-where 'breath' is consistently spelt tïn (note also that there are two main entries for 'bride', tîn and tîn). Indeed it is likely that the same word was used for 'breath' and 'rest' (i.e. stopping to take breath). It is significant that this is one of the rare cases of a homophonic N. and V. and that the V. is translated both 'to breathe' and 'to rest'. The two words have therefore been treated as identical. Tîn 'breath', sometimes by extension 'spirit, life', survives in all NE languages; NC Kir. (also dûm); NW Kaz., Kk. NE Tel. (R III 1342), Khak. also have a word tîn 'silent' which seems to be a Sec. f. Türkül viii ff. Man. tîn tura tegrîl 'the God of the Zephyr(?)' Chuar. 34, etc. (see I tura): Uyg. vii ff. Man. tîn tura tegrîl M I 21, 1; Bud. PP 38, 4 (I ağı); U III 43, 31 (buz): Civ. tîn alu umasâr 'if he cannot draw breath' H I 144; a.o. do. 60, etc. (büzgal); tîn uzun 'his life is long' T T VII 29, 17; Xak. xi tîn al-rîh wa al-nafas 'breath, soul'; hence one says anîn tînî: (sic) kesîldi: 'the man's breath was cut off' Kaş. I 339; tîn kîşî: 'a man who has retired (al-muçimm) and does not engage in work'; also used of any animal when it rests for some days and is released from work (îdà istarîhà ayywâ wa acamâna) Kaş. III 138; o.o. I 176 (ôçûrî); 192 (ôçûkî); 248 and three o.o.; all 'breath' and: KB tîn tôtîşî 'drawing esgil axir tînim 'cut off my tîn' 394; a.o. 773; Xwar. xiv 102; Kom. xiv 'spirit, soul' (nûmûn); 'a follow field' tîn (sic) bol- CCG; Xap. xiv tîn al-rîh Id. 40: din al-nafas; one says dinî alîştî: 'he breathed' (tanaffasî) that is alîştî: 'he received, or took', fr. aliche; with -is- for reciprocity (al-mûşârâhâ), his breath do. 50: xav nafas tin Tuh. 36a. 8.

VU tîn Hap. leg.; meaning doubtful. It has been suggested that this is the basis of tîplâ: but this is very dubious. Uyg. viii ff. Civ. (the clatter of the ten-fold kaş ('?jade') game is heard. . . . if you break off (the game), your property has gone as garlic goes) kaş tînî tîgî edgînî basî (read bezdî) 'your good things have been shaken (? ) like the sound(?) of the kaş TT 97–8.

tîn the exact meaning is doubtful; the likeliest is 'halter', or 'leading-rein', but 'bridle' and 'rein' cannot be excluded. Survives in NE several dialects (R III 1360), Khak. and Tuv. (din). Uyg. viii ff. Bud. (then the prince) aîn tînî tîrât (sic) 'reining in his horse' USp. 97, 3; a.o. do. 20 (kerîlû): Xak. xi tîn al-mûşâqat 'halter'; hence one says tîn tîzîn miqîaad wa inân 'halter and rein' Kaş. I 339; tîn al-iânîn III 138.

VU tîn Hap. leg.; exactly synonymous with tîk. Xak. xi one says er tîq türîdî intasabâ l-raciîl qa'îma(n) 'the man stood upright' Kaş. III 356.

tôn (d-) 'garment, clothing'. S.i.a.m.l.g. in most modern languages for 'outer garment, overcoat'; in SW Az., Osm. dîn; Tkm. dîn. It has been usual for some years to describe this as a.l.-w. fr. Saka jauna 'clothing', but it is unlikely that the Turks would have had native word for 'clothing', and there are difficulties about the initial sound; the resemblance is therefore dubious, due to coincidence. Türkül viii (tomsız, q.v.); viii ff. Man. tîn tôngî 'clothing' (i.e. everything that a man is wearing) M I 15, 13; 7, 11–14; Uyg. viii ff. tîn nûnî prábî 'a body loose' (lit. clothing loose) M I 8, 14; Bud. tîn 'clothing' common U II 15, 13; III 38, 17; PP 76, 1; Sanskrit vastra 'clothing' tîn T T VIII D 11; bârâ ditto tîn kêm (khetim) do. 38: Civ. tîn 'clothing' common T T I 149; VII 26, 10; 38, 10(bçç), etc.; VIII 120; USp. passim: Xak. xi tîn al-tâwîb 'clothing' Kaş. F tana 'coriander seed', etc.; no doubt, as Kaj, says, an Iranian l-w. and prob. specifically fr. the Pe. form dana; interesting as showing that foreign initial d- was devoiced in the languages listed below. D tana- Hap. leg.; Imperat. of tana; the phr. quoted seems to mean 'see if I don’t', see yamu: Kaj.’s explanation suggests that he did not understand the grammar of the phr.; there are several corruptions in the MS. Xak. x1 tanu: yamu: (both unvocalized, t- for y- in the second word) ‘two particles’ (haraf:n) meaning hatta təhsir (MS. yaṣir); hence one says men bərgaymen <tanu-: yamu: ‘I shall go hatta təhsir, see (if I don’t)’ Kaj. Kaj.’s statement that the word originally meant ‘tiger’ is not confirmed by any other authority (the evidence in the case of U I 39, 15/IV 8, 15 is not conclusive) and is improbable. If it did, it is odd that the Indian word for ‘tigress’ was translated tələ bars (a l-w.) in U III 63, 4-5; Swu. 609, 17. When not used as a component in P.N.s it seems to mean, rather vaguely, ‘her, outstanding warrior’, or the like. N.o.a.b. Cf. topaļi, topala-. Uyg. viii ff. Man. tanu-: this V. presents some difficulties, since it is hard to reconcile its various meanings; there may in fact have been two almost homophonous V.s, tanu-: (d-) 'to suggest, recommend, discuss', and the like, and tanu-ti (t-) 'to be acquainted with (someone)', the latter not noted before xv. This is supported by the fact that there are in SW Az., Osm., Tkm. *tani- 'to be acquainted with', and *tanış- 'to be acquainted with one another' and in Az., Osm. VU _tanç_: ‘to be, or become, putrid; to smell foul’. There is some doubt about the first vowel; in the main entry, it is shown twice as -i- and once unmarked; in II 281, 12 it is -o/-u- but perhaps only because the word rhymes with _yünçi-; in III 303, 11 it is -i-, but a philological note is added in which it is given as -a-; and in the Co-op. f. it is three times given as -a-. ?E tançgala-/ tançkla- this V. has been read in the two passages below, and it was suggested in TT III, p. 26, footnote 5, that it is a Freq. f. in -galâ- or *tanç-. Such Freq. f.s do exist in some modern languages, but seem to be unknown in Uyg. There can be little doubt that this is merely tançula-: mistranscribed. Uyg. viii ff. D töpîl: pcc. to Kaş.; morphology obscure, as in the case of öpîl; comparison with töprü: suggests that it is a Den. Xak. xi ol maça: sôz tanûtti: amarâni bi-îsât'îl-kalim li-gâyri 'he ordered me to convey the command (or recommendation) to someone else' Kaş. II 312 (tanûtur, tanûtumak):

Çâg. xv ff. tan-t- Caus. f. šinâşand'an 'to make acquainted' San. 162 v. 2 (quots).

VUD teji- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of teji, q.v.; in the MS. the first vowel is -e- everywhere. Xak. xi er okin teji- 'the man launched (a'îdî) his arrow upwards in the direction of the sky' Kaş. III 396 (tejiûrî, tejiêtîmek, corrected fr. -ma:îk).

D tonat- (d-) Caus. f. of tona- Den. V. fr. tona- which is not noted in Turkish before xv, Çağ. San. 185 v. 7, but was old enough to become a xiii l.-w. in Mong. as tona- (Haensch 151), could etymologically have two opposite meanings 'to put clothes on (oneself or someone else)' and 'to strip clothes off (ditto'). The two early occurrences are both in the latter sense, and the V. survives for 'to rob' as tona- in NE Khak., NC Kız. and tona- in Kîr., and as tonma- (? for tonla-) in Tuv., but NE Şor tona- means 'to dress oneself'. Most of these words have a Caus. f.

Xak. xi ol meni tonattî: 'he dressed me in a garment (albasanî'l-taçh) as a gift from himself' Kaş. II 312 (tonatûr, tonatâmak); its origin is ton ma: 'he sent him a garment':

Osm. xiv ff. donat- (occasionally tonat-) (1) 'to dress, fit out (someone)'; (2) 'to cover with abuse'; (3) 'to equip' (e.g. a ship); fairly common TTS I 218; III 205; IV 237.

D tünet- (d-) Caus. f. of tûne: 'to put (someone) up for the night'. S.i.m.m.l. in this meaning. Xak. xi ol konuкуg eyde: tünetti: 'he put up (abâta) the guest in the house for the night' Kaş. II 312 (tünetûr, tünetmek): xiii (?). At. tünetûr tûnûntî künuq keterîp 'he makes your night dark, taking away your sun (or day?)' 15: Tef. Makkani tünetî 'he spent the night in Mecca' 318.

D töpît- (töpîd-) n.o.a.b. but see topta- for the etymology for töpît-; as the Caus. f. töpîder- means 'to invent' and the like this V. is presumably Intrans. meaning 'to bow down, bend down, move downwards', and the like başm in the quots. below being in the Insr. and not the Acc. with Poss. Suff. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. PP 19, 4 (1 baş): Xak. xi er başnîn töpîtî: 'the man lowered (ta'ta'a) his head' (etc.) Kaş. III 396 (töpîtûr, töpîtîmek; spelt töpût- everywhere): KB yêtîgen köttürdî yana baş orû töpîtî yana yîldrîk adûrî naru 'the Great Bear raised its head upwards again; Providence (?) and Sirius (?) moved downwards again’ 6220.

E topta- has been read in the passage below but certainly mistranslated. The letters to and tms are quite clear, the slim letter between them is not. It cannot be a front -t-/ -s- as Radloff originally suggested, both because it would be out of place here and because there is no known V. tosat- / tosat-. Malov’s 1959 reading tokta- is impossible because there is no room for -k- and because tokta- is a Mong. l.-w. which did not occur in Turkish before xviii at earliest. The obvious course is to read it as topt- and take it as an alternative form with back vowels of töpt- parallel to the Uyğ. form with back vowels of tödzer.- Türkü viii (when I ascended the throne the Türkü people, who were expecting to die soon) liga sevinip toptımıș közl: yügerü: körtli: ‘rejoicing and being glad raised their downcast eyes and looked up’ II E 2.

2) tindur- (d-) Caus. f. of 1 tun-; survives in some of the same languages. Usually meaning ‘to cause to rest’. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. VUD tondur- Caus. f. of ton- , q.v. regarding the first vowel. Survives as tondur- in several NE languages and NC Kir., Kzx. but the semantic connection with the latter is dubious. PU taqan the first letter is undotted and unpunctuated in the main entry, which implies that the following is the heading -N in a list of words containing three consonants of which the second is -p- and the first anything except y-; as for practical purposes be- never precedes -p- in Xak., the word can hardly be anything except tagan. In the second occurrence the first letter is y- but this is certainly an error. The translation suggests that it was 'a hooded crow, Corvus cornix', or 'a jackdaw, Corvus monedula'. In modern languages these birds are called ala (alaca, etc.) karğa. Xak. xi taqan al-aqqa minâl-gerân 'a white-headed crow' that is one of which the head is white Kas. tepe: a very old word, prob. pre-Turkish, which can be traced back to the language of the Hsiung-nu, III B.C., if not earlier. It seems originally to have meant 'the physical sky', but very early acquired religious overtones and came to mean 'Heaven' as a kind of impersonal deity, the commoner meaning in the earlier texts. It was the normal word for 'God' in Man. and Bud. texts and was retained in this sense in the Moslem period, although it is rare in KB, where the normal word for 'God' is bayat, and was later largely displaced by l-w.s like Allâh and xudây. An early l-w. in Mong. as tegeri (Haenisch 148, Kow. 1697); but often spelt tyre, as in Turkish, in religious texts and always dêri in the hP'ags-pa texts). S.i.a.m.l.g., in NE often in the Mong. spelling, in SW Az., Osm., Tkmm. teprî; this is prob. an old Ouz. pronunciation, but it is impossible to discover when the change occurred; a l-w. in Peh. see Donfer II 944, where it is discussed at great length. Türkî viii teprî: is common; in üzê: kök teprî: asra: yağiz yer Küldündüka: 'when the blue sky above and the brown earth below were created' I E 1, II E 2 it clearly has a physical sense, but this is rare; it is more often used in a religious sense, e.g. teprî: yarla:kaðu:ın: üçün 'because Heaven so commanded' I S 9, II N 7, and even as a sort of tribal deity in üzê: Türkî teprî:isi: 'the Heaven of the Türkû on high' I E 11, II E 10: viii ff. teprî: is fairly common in IrKB, both in a physical sense, e.g. (a hawk) teprî:în (sic) koðî: ... kapmî: 'swooped down from the sky' 44; and in a religious sense, e.g. ala: atla: yoll (or yul) teprî: men 'I am the god of the road or the spring' riding on a dappled horse' 2; Man. teprî: (consistently spelt tyrî in all scripts) is very common; in yer teprî yok erken şore 'when earth and heaven did not yet exist' Chnus. 162-3 it has a physical sense, but nearly always means 'Heaven' or 'divine': Yen. üzê: teprî: yarla:kað: Mal.

tepîz (d-) first actually noted in XI when it replaced taluyû, q.v., which disappeared at that date, but so old that it existed in the L.R language from which Hungarian tenger 'sea, ocean' was borrowed; originally prob. any 'large body of water', whether static, like a lake, or moving, like a large river; later specifically, and finally exclusively, 'the sea'. As al-bahr, the Ar. word habitually used to translate it, is equally ambiguous it is impossible to trace the exact evolution of meaning and difficult to determine the precise difference between tepîz and kûl, q.v., except that the latter seems to have had a narrower meaning. S.i.a.m.l.g. only for the 'sea', except in some NE languages which use talay, reborrowed fr. Mong., in this sense; in SW Az. deniz; Osm., Tkm. depeş. See Dörfier III 1192. Xak. XI tepîz al-bahr Kaş. tar - 'to disperse, or divide up (something)', and the like. N.o.a.b. The supposed Sec. f. tara- is rather dubious, and may be based on nothing more than the fact that tara-, q.v., has a vaguely cognate meaning. It is very unlikely that there is any real etymological connection between this word and Mong. tarka- 'to scatter, disperse' (Intrans.; Haenisch 145) which became a l.-w. in Xwar. xiv tarğâ-, Qubt 171, and survives as tara- in several modern NE, NC, and NW languages, R III 837, etc. Xak. xi bg süsin tarâ: 'the beg dispersed (jarraqa) his army'; also used of anyone who disperses anything Kaş. *tîr- (d-) the basis of tîrîk, tîrîkîr-, tîrîl-; its exact nature is obscure; as it had a Pass. f. it was presumably Trans. and meant something like 'to bring to life, revive', but in that case the status of the Caus. f. tîrîk- with precisely that meaning is obscure. The Kip. word below looks more like a back-formation fr. tîrîg than a survival of the original verb. Kip. xiv tîrî- (sic) hâyiya 'to live, be alive'; also pronounced with d- Id. 38.

I tur- (d-) 'to stand', both in the sense of 'to stand upright' and 'to stand still' with various extended meanings. From an early date it was also used as an Aux. V. following a Gerund in -tu/-î, -p or -galî/-geli; with different shades of meaning, but usually 'to continue to (do something)'. From a date as early at least as Uyg. Chr. the Aor. turur, later abbreviated to tur/dur, etc., but no other part of the V. was used as a copula meaning 'is' and so replacing erûr. C.i.a.p.a. in SW Az., Osm. dur- in Tkm. both tur- and dur-; as the vowel is short in Tkm., Kaş's alternative form tur- is prob. an error or dialect form. Most Turkish grammars and some dictionaries discuss the various idiomatizations of this V. at great length. törü: (tööö) 'traditional, customary, unwritten law'; one of the basic political terms of the Turkish pagan period. It was closely associated with 1 été and xanğan in the sense that it could not exist without a 'realm' as its sphere and a 'ruler' to administer it. It was adopted as a religious term both by Buddhist and Manichaean missionaries in the sense of a 'rule' subordinate to the prescriptions of the true doctrine or religious law, no:m, q.v. In Xak., where it was still common, it meant 'custom, customary law', as opposed to the religious law of Islam (al-şari'a) and prob. also to the arbitrary decrees of rulers. It became an early l.w. in Mong. as dâre:töre. It is not clear whether the form töre current fr. the medieval period onwards, and still surviving in some NW languages including Kar. T., R III 1250, and SW Osm. is a direct survival of the old word or a reborrowing fr. Mong. and some confusion arises from the fact that it is homophonous with the word for 'prince' and the like in these and other languages, see töre. Certainly in Osm., its true origin was so far forgotten that in Sami 449 it is spelt tura and described as a l.w. fr. Hebrew torah. F tarxan (uk)arxan) a title of great antiquity, prob. pre-Turkish discussed at great length (144 pages) in Doerfer II 870. In spite of its scepticism, Prof. Pulleyblank's theory in 'The Consontantal System of Old Chinese', Asia Major, N.S. IX, 1962, p. 97, that it represents the Hsiung-nu title of their supreme ruler, šaŋ-yi (in Old Chinese *dǎn-yī for daxan) seems the best explanation yet of its origin. Like tēgīn it forms its Plur. in -t- tarxat, for *tarxan(n). It is likely that in this word the Runic and Uyg. k represented x, cf. the form in Kaş. In Turkish it had ceased to be the supreme title and was not even, like tēgīn and şad, peculiar to the royal family, but it was still a high title, and prob. carried administrative türk originally a N. meaning 'the culminating point of maturity' (of a fruit, human being, etc.), but more often used as an Adj. meaning (of a fruit) 'just fully ripe'; (of a human being) 'in the prime of life, young, and vigorous'. It has been suggested that this word is identical with the ethnonym Türk and really means 'strong' in a general sense. The latest exposition of this theory is in Doerfer II 888, an article of over 11 pages giving a history of the ethnonym and unfortunately containing several errors. The case against the theory, which is based on the facts that the original form of the ethnonym was Türkkî and that tûrk is never used in the generalized sense of 'strong', is in Studies, pp. 84 ff.; see also Clauson, 'The concept of "strength" in Turkish', Nemeth Armağam, pp. 93 ff., Ankara, 1962. D tarmî N.S.A. fr. tarm-; lit. 'a single act of dispersing'; Hap. leg. as a common N. but familiar as the name of a river. (VU) Usmî: is perhaps the pre-Turkish name for it. Xak. XI tarmî 'branches (a'dâd) of a river which flows into swamps and quicksands'; Tarum the name of a place on the frontier of Uygur near Kuça; called Tarum (sic); a river flows through it; the river is called by the same name Kaş, I 396: (VI) Usmi: Tarum the name of a large river which flows from the Moslem country to Uygur and there sinks into the sand I 130.

S (D) terim a royal title or form of address; a l.-w. in Pe., see Doerfer II 1000. In spite of his scepticism, Pelliot's suggestion that this is a crisis of teprim, q.v., is the most plausible explanation of this word. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. terim component in a feminine P.N. Sw. 137, 18 (ażanım): Civ. kiz kelirgiççi iki terim 'the two ladies who brought the bride' Fam. Arch. 154-5: Xak. xi terim a form of address (şişab) to princes (al-tahākin) and anyone who is a descendant (min aušād) of Afrasyiib, royal ladies (al-xawātīn) and others, great and small; this word is not applied to anyone except the children of Xa-kāni kings; if they are grown up (kaburī) altun terim is used in the title of royal ladies (ft laqabī'in-šiīt il-xawātīn) Kaş, I 396: Çağ. (?): xv ff. ātesem (so spelt) a name for great ladies (xawātīn-i buzurğ); (Pe. quotn.); the author of the Farhang-i Ghāngīrī included this word in his dict. with a quotn. San. 192r. 24.

torun 'a camel colt', the next age-group beyond a botu; q.v.; the age indicated varies in different languages. Survives in NE Tuv. dorum 'a one-year old'; SW Osm. torun (sic) 'a two-year old'; Tkm. torun 'between six months and a year'. See Shcherbak, p. 106. Xak. xi terun (bšl-isba, 'with back vowels') ibn maxād 'a camel colt', feminine tişi: torun Kaş, I 396: xiv Muh. al-faşiil 'a camel colt just weaned' torun/torum Mel. 7, 15; Rif. 79; al-hiqq properly 'a three-year old', but the only word for 'calf' under 'camels' torum 70, 9; 172 Çağ. xv ff. torun 'a two-year old camel colt'; a one-year old is called köşek and köşlek and a three-year taylak; and it (?) taylak is also a stallion (aš-i nahr) which they allow to run with the mares and breed from San. 173. 9; a.o. 306v. 18 (köşek): (Kip. xiv (a camel) allad lahu sanatān 'two years old' torumçax Bul. 7, 5).

D turum (d.-) N.S.A. fr. I tur-; lit. 'a single act of standing'. S.i.s.m.l. with various extended meanings, e.g. SW Osm., Tkm. durum 'position, attitude'. Uyg. viii ff. Man. turum ara seems to mean 'completely', or 'immediately'; (anger) turum ara (destroys fully matured discipline and humble thoughts) TT II 17, 70: Bud. (let the king offer incense . . .) ol tütüsgin tütünü turum ara kök kalik içinde yadılip 'the smoke of that incense will immediately pervade the atmosphere and' Sup. 424, 12-14; a.o. 425, 21: Xak. xi turum qadar qamatı'l-raqul 'the height of a man standing upright'; hence one says bir er turum: suv 'water (etc.) the depth of the height of a man' Kaş, I 396: (xiv Muh. (under 'weavers' implements') siskati'l-ğazi 'the length(?) of thread' (PU) turum Mel. 60, 7; Rif. 159 may belong here).

turma: Preliminary note. This word occurs in Uyg. in contexts which suggest that it means 'an offering', prob. of food. In this sense it seems to be an Intrans. Dev. N. fr. I tur- in the sense of something which is set before a god. Elsewhere it means 'radish' both in Turkish and Pe. and other languages, see Doerfer II 897. It survives in one or two NW languages; elsewhere it has been displaced by Pe. turp. Doerfer is prob. right in suggesting that, in view of the resemblance between the two words and the impossibility of finding a Turkish etymology for the word in this sense, it is a l.-w.

D I turma: Dev. N. fr. I tur-; lit. 'standing'; 'an offering'. N.o.a.b. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. TT VII 16 is a fragment of a text prescribing the offerings to be made to various divine personages. Ll. 7-16 listing the offerings to be made to the planets is headed aşları erser 'as for their foods'; these offerings are vegetables and dairy products. Ll. 17 ff. listing similar offerings to be made to the yakṣas is headed yakşaların turmaları erser; (and after preaching this sütro) yavğan turma [gap] egsüşgisi(? yêtğürğeli 'offering plain offerings without stint(?)' (to the four divine mahārajās—i.e. the yakṣas) Sw. 26, 19-20; tört maharac tephirkerka turma őtűneyin 'I will offer offerings to the four divine mahārajās' do. 27, 12-13.

? F 2 turma: 'radish'. Xak. xi turma: al-ful (MS. fiel) 'radish'; hence al-cazar 'carrot' is called sarīg turma: that is 'yellow radish', and the people of Arguz call it güzerg; fr. the Pe. word for 'carrot', gazar, substituting front vowels (rakkakīha); the Oğuz call it (VV) güşür, also taken from the Persians; when they mingled with the Persians they forgot some of their language and used Persian instead (various examples follow) Kaş, I 431; a.o. I 366 (köyil): Kip. xii al-ful (açi: (PU) ereńe; also called) turma: Hou. 8, 13: (xiv turp ('with -p') al-ful Id. 38).

D tarmut Hap. leg. but see tarmutluğ, tarmutlan--; Active Dev. N. fr. tarmam—with -a-—elided; lit. 'something which branches out'. Xak. xi tarmut fidacvul'-cabal wa talā'ahu 'ravines and stream-beds in the mountains'; hence one says tağ tarmut keçim 'I crossed ravines and stream-beds in the mountains' Kaş, I 451.

D tarmak Conc. N. fr. tarmam--; as that V. is a Den. V. fr. tarmמ the basic meaning must be 'something which branches out in several directions', but, perhaps because of its resemblance to tırgak, it sometimes means 'claw' instead of 'a set of claws, a talon' which would etymologically be more correct. Survives in NE Şor tarbak 'leather glove'; Tel. tarmak
D türmek (d-) Conc. N. fr. tür-; 'a stuffed meat ball', lit. 'something wrapped up'. Pec. to Xak. Xak. xi türmek al-zumâward 'a stuffed meat ball' Kaş. I 477; o.o. I 396 (tikim); II 106 (tikl-): KB kâši utruki türmek alma têgü (at meals) 'do not reach out and take a meat ball in front of someone else' 4598.

VU? D tarmaz a gherkin'; in I 343 spelt türmuz. Unless this is a l.-w. cognate to 2 türma: it is prob. the Neg. Aor. Participle of tar-, lit. 'not branching', i.e. compact, as a gherkin is. Xak. xi tarmaz al-qiṭad 'gherkin' Kaş. I 457; a.o. I 343 (karç).

D tarmaz- Den. V. fr. târm; lit. 'to branch out in various directions, take the shape of a talon', and the like, in practice 'to scratch' (i.e. 'to use a talon') and in some modern languages 'to rake up'. S.i.s.m.l. w. the same phonetic changes as tarmak, q.v.; the SW sound change -a- > -e-, prob. under the influence of tîp, is reflected in the vocalization of some of the der. fs. in the MS of Kaş. This, I say, single-handed. Even the meekest rumples can be raised from the ground.

...and there's the rub. In short, if one desires to conquer the world, if one wishes to be a conqueror, if one seeks to reign supreme, if one flames with ambition, if one burnishes one's armor and wields one's sword, then one must arm oneself with knowledge, for knowledge is power. It is the key to understanding the world and to manipulating it to one's advantage. Without knowledge, one is but a pawn in the grand chessboard of existence.

taysi: A Chinese phr. which became a l.-w. in Mong., prob. direct and not through Turkish, in which case the Çağ word was prob. borrowed fr. Mong. In Mong. it is a very high title (Kore. 1551 'vizar, prime minister'; Haltd 899 ditto). The first syllable is certainly t'ai 'great' (Giles 10,573); 'chief minister' is t'ai tsai (Giles 11,490); this might be the word in Turkish, if it was transcribed taysi, but can hardly be the word in Çağ, which looks more like t'ai shih (Giles 9,683) 'chief historiographer' (or 'astronomer'); v. G. (Index to TT I-V, p. 42) suggested that the Turkish word was t'ai ta: (Giles 12,317) 'prince', but this phr. actually means 'senior prince, heir apparent', and could hardly be used in the Plur. Turkish viii ff. Man. kunc-ular taysilar (or taysilar?) ulug atiqlalar 'the royal consorts, chief ministers(?), and notables' TT II 8, 64: Çağ. xv ff. taysi (spelt) in the language of the Chinese (Xitdu:yan) dabir wa: hädj:q wa: mähir wa: ustâd 'secretary, expert, master-craftsmen', also spelt taysi San. 167r. 17; taysi in Mongolian, 'scribe (nivisanda), expert, master-craftsmen' do. 261r. 25.

Trans. Den. V. fr. tüz; n.o.a. See tüzgeriçsi. So spelt in Kas. in the Perf., but the Aor. and prob. the İnfin. have -gür-, which is the Türkü form. It is unlikely that this is tüzgir- Caus. of. tüz-, which is itself Trans., and the -d- is prob. due to labial attraction. Türkü vii ff. D tüzgerinsiz formerly misread as two separate words tüz herinsiz, and discussed at length in TT IX, p. 20, notes 7-8; X, p. 15, note 96; clearly a Priv. N./A. fr. a Dev. N. fr. the Refl. f. of a Den. V. in -ğer-; the suggestion there is that it is a Dev. V., more or less syn. w. tüber-, fr. tız. This is semantically unconvincing; there is no other trace of such a V., while tüzler-, q.v., is well established. Etymologically the word should mean 'without being guided', but in practice it corresponds to Sanskrit anuttara 'unsurpassable'; the connotation is perhaps 'requiring no guidance'. Uyğ. viii ff. Man. (you came down to earth after the four (?) prophets) tüzgerinsiz burxan kutun bultupuz 'you have acquired the unsurpassable majestic position(?) of prophet' TT III 66; o.o. do. 153, 178; IX 8 (habitually spelt tüzkerinsiz in Man. ka: Preliminary note. Von G. was no doubt right in suggesting in "TT" X, p. 47 that ka: in the phr. ka: kadaş is a L.-w. fr. Chinese "chia 'family' (Pulleyblank, Middle Chinese ka; Giles 1,139). Kaş's etymology of kadaş is therefore demonstrably wrong, and the question arises whether the word ka: 'vessel' was not invented to justify this false etymology. Kaş is the only authority for the word, and it seems likely that if it really existed, too, was a Chinese L.-w., but there is no obvious origin for it.

F 1 ka: 'family'; see above. Found only in the phr. ka: kadaş, which is n.o.a.b. The evolution of this phr. into kab kadaş, also n.o.a.b., is odd and perhaps due to the false etymology mentioned above. It should be noted that both elements in the phr. are declined separately. Uyg. VIII ff. Bud. ka kadaş 'family and kinsmen' is common, e.g. ka kadaş oğlu kiz ed tavar 'family and kinsmen, sons and daughters, movable property, and livestock' U III 6, 2 (i); kamin kadaşının do. 36, 35; kasi kadaşi Sw. 5, 7; a.o.o.: Civ. ka kadaşka tartuğça bolur 'he becomes closely attached to his family and kinsmen' TT VII 37, 13 (note ka: not declined); in the provisions in commercial documents prohibiting relatives from objecting to an agreement one typical list is ecnim inim kam kadaşım 'my elder and younger brothers, my family and relations' USp. 107, 11; 108, 11, 110, 9-10; Xak. XI KB (a man must associate) kab (sic in MSS.) kadaslar bile 3209; a.o. 3213; XIII (?) Tef. kab kadaşım (sic) 'my family and kinsmen'; kabi kadaşını 198: Xwar. kab kadaşım Qutb 126.

F 2 ka: 'vessel, container'; see above. N.o.a.b. Cf. kab. Xak. XI ka: al-zarf va'll-rettâ 'a vessel or container' but used only for vessels containing liquids; hence one says ka: kaça: zarf va'll-rettâ as a Hend. Kas. III 211 (followed by a para. on -ka: as the Dat. Suffix); (under tüdeş) hence (i.e. by using the Suff. -deş) one says kadaş for 'brother, kinsman' (li'l-tex va'll-qarib); the base is ka: and -daş is attached to the same vessel (zarf) that is their mother's womb I 407; a.o. III 238 (kaça:).

Ki: Exclamation; Atalay in Kas. III 212, note says that it is still used in Anatolia. Xak. XI ki: exclamation (harfü'l-nida) corresponding to the (Ar.) yâ'l-nida; hence one says ki: berü: kel 'hi! come here'; pronounced with a very long vowel (?; yumadd baywâ'l-gâf wa'll-câr) Kas. III 212 (followed by a para. on -ki: as an affectionate Suff. attached to terms of relationship, e.g. ata:ki: yâ ubayyâ 'my dear father').

Mon. V. GA-
ka:- Hap. leg.; the morphological connection with ka:- is obscure. Yağma: xı ol eşçèke: otonü kadi: 'he heaped (açoğa) firewood round the cooking pot'; one also says ol tonü kadi: 'he packed (abhâ) the garment into the cupboard'; the more correct form (al-afâh) is kâlaði: Kas. DIS. GBG kabak/kapak Preliminary note. Morphologically kabak Dim. f. of kab, and kapak. Den. V. f. 2 *kap- are quite different words. They are still distinguished phonetically in SW Az. (gabğaq/gapaq) and Osm. (kabak/kapak) but in early texts they are spelt and, in some modern languages, pronounced exactly the same, and it is not always easy to determine which word is intended. Exceptionally, in SW Tkm. 'pumpkin' is sometimes kabak, but gabaq means 'eyelid' and gabaq 'cover, lid'.

D kabak Dim. f. of kab; lit. 'a small container', in practice 'gourd, pumpkin, marrow', and the like (but not 'sweet melon'). S.i.m.l.g. except NE(?) w. some phonetic changes. L.-w. in Pe. etc., Doerfer III 1419. Xak. xı kabak al-dubba tawâwa-l-qar 'a pumpkin', that is a gourd which is eaten fresh (rajb) Kaş. I 382 (between two translations of kapak): Çağ. xv ff. kabagaq/kabak ('with -b-') (1) hadî 'gourd'; (2) metaphor. 'a target' (nişana-nama) which they fasten on the top of a tall pole and shoot at (quoth.). Originally in shooting competitions they put a pumpkin on the top of a tall pole and so the word came to be used for 'target' San. 265r. 14: Kom. xiv 'pumpkin' kabak ČČI; Gr.: Kip. xiiii al-qar nan'l-yapfin ('marrow') kabak Hou. 8, 11: xiv kabak 'a pumpkin at which they shoot arrows' Id. 68: xiv al-qar kabak Kaş. 63, 13: Tuh. 29b. 3. Osm. xiv ff. see kapak.

D kapak Dev. N. fr. 2 *kap- 'lit. 'something which covers or closes', usually used for 'a lid, or other cover', and 'eyelid'. S.i.m.l.g. w.
some phonetic changes. L.—w. in Pe., etc., Doerfler III 1367, 1545. Türkü viii ff. Man. Xwar. xiv kapak 'eyelid' Qub 126: Kip. xiv kabak (sic); 'target' and çafşul‘-ayn (and -aluža 'blan'; all three simultaneously) Id. 68 (sec kabak, kavik): xiv çafş kapak (-b—) Tuh. 11a. 12; Osm. xiv—xv kapak 'eyelid' TT S I 398; II 559; III 392; IV 448 (here spelt kabah; the word is also noted in all periods meaning 'drinking cup', for which kabak is perhaps right): xvii kapak ('with -p-') in Rımi, sar püs 'cover, lid' San. 265t. 17.

D kapça Conc. N. in -ğa fr. 2 *kap-; 'door, gate'. The second vowel was originally -a- but became -a- in Man.-A. and some Uyg. (Uyg.-A) texts and later became -u- by labial attraction. Survives in some NW languages and SW Az., Osm., Tkm.; elsewhere displaced by eşlik. L.—w. in Pe., etc. as kapu, etc., Doerfler III 1368. Türkü viii temir kapç 'the Iron Gate', a pass between Balkh and Samarkand is mentioned several times in I, II, T, Ix.: vii ff. Man. tamu kapçına 'to the gate of hell' Chias. 126; kapajın açtı 'he opened its gate' M I 13, 7; o.o. do. 8–12; M III 23, 2 (ii); TT II 8, 65: Uyg. viii ff. kavuk 'bran'; n.o.a.b. Cf. kepek; the existence of two similar words with this meaning suggests that they may have a common foreign origin. Uyg. viii ff. Civ. kavik kilap ala külke sürtser alast kété 'if one makes bran and rubs it on a man with a blotchy skin, his blotches disappear' TT VII 23, 4–5: Xak. xiv kavik 'bran' (al-muzâla) of millet; Kas. (D) kavuk morphologically Pass. Dev. N. fr. *kav-; 'the bladder' (of a man or animal). S.i.m.m.l.g. w. considerable phonetic changes; some modern forms are liable to be confused with those of kovuk. The alternative form kğük in Uyg. Civ. may be the original form. Uyg. viii ff. Civ. (the 14th letter is called iriриu(؟)). kavuk idize urğo ol 'one must place it over the bladder' TT VII 41, 13: kğük sizlağa em 'a cure for an ache in the bladder' H I 165; a.o. do. 37 (tşl): Xak. xiv kavuk al-matâna 'the bladder' Kas. D kubarça:k, etc.; words of this general form are recorded in forms and with meanings so various that it is at first sight doubtful whether they can all be traced back to a single origin. If they can it must be a Dev. N. fr. kaba:r and should mean etymologically 'blister, pustule', and the like. Such a word could be used metaph. for 'the carapace' of a tortoise, and perhaps even for 'box', but it is hard to see how it could have come to mean 'puppet, doll'. The modern words NE Alt. kabîrcik; Bar. kabîrdzak; Tel. kabîrcak R II 451; NC Kir. kabîrîç; Kzîx. karîrîxk all meaning 'fish-scale; mollusc shell; a thin layer (of ice on water, of skin on milk)' seem to be survivals of such a word, but show the usual sound change -a- > -i- in the second syllable; how old the change is is uncertain, the vowel points in the MS. of Kaş. look like later additions. The situation is complicated by the fact that Mong. koboʃor 'hollowed out', hence 'container, case, quiver' (the change in meaning may have arisen from confusion with koboʃa:k, the Mong. form of kovqa:, q.f.)
became a l.-w. in Çağ. or Osm. as kobur/kubur San. 282r. 22 and Pe., Dorfer I 268, and forms like koburçak are prob. Dim. f.s of this l.-w. kat Preliminary note. Apart from 1 kat and 2 kat below kat has also been read as the name of the mythological monster in Xwar. xiii(?); Oğ. 22 ff. This is certainly an error. Sinor has pointed out that these scriptions are attempts to represent one or other of two Sanskrit words ganda and khadga or Prakrit forms of them, all meaning 'rhinoceros'. Khadga (prob. in a 'Tohharian' form) appears in U III 74, 7 as ktkl and also in the Chin.-Uyg. Dict. where chi'lin, usually translated 'unicorn' (Giles I, 1044, 7, 186) is translated kat R II 273; Ligeti 164.

1 kat basically 'a layer' of something, hence 'a fold' (of a blanket), 'a story' (of a house) and the like; hence, on the analogy of a number of layers, 'times' in such expressions as 'so many times'. C.i.a.p.a.l. L.-w. in Pe., etc., Doerfer I 1429. Türkî viii ff. 2 kat (kađ) a generic term for 'berry'; survives in some NE languages R II 275 and Tuv., the particular kind being indicated by an Attributive. Xak. xi katt hamül'-îdâh acma 'a generic term for the fruit of thorn

the qurm tree', and (VU) sançqan kattı:
hamül'-îdâh; this fruit is crushed and mixed with curdled milk and used to colour tûmaça:
in Yemeck, Kip., Kav. Tatâr it is used for the 'fruit of any kind of tree Kaş. III 146.

kut originally in a rather mystical sense 'the favour of heaven', thence, less specifically
'good fortune' and the like, and thence, more generally, 'happiness'. In KB, where it is regarded as syn. w. Ar. dawla, it came to mean, more neutrally, 'fortune', either good or bad.
S.i.a.m.l.g., usually for 'good fortune, hap-niness', and the like, but in one or two languages,
esp. in NE, it seems rather to mean 'soul, life force'. More or less syn. w. kiv, q.v. In two late Uyğ. Civ. texts the word transcribed kut is a transcription in TT VII 42, 4 of (Ar.)
quvat 'strength', and in USP. 88, 24 of qıt

(here an attribute, not a gift, of a divine per-

the sense of 'favour of heaven', and in a sense of which the best equivalent is 'majesty'; the first meaning appears in such passages as the prince reached the island) kutı ulugû uçın
'because he enjoyed the favour of heaven and good fortune' PP 33, 5, and the second in kaşim kattı 'His Majesty my father' do. 6, 4;
the meaning of the common phr. burxan kuti is less obvious; it is usually translated the 'blessed state of being a Buddha' and in some contexts it must have that meaning, e.g.
kayu kün burxan kutın bulsår 'when (you)
attain the blessed state of being a Buddha' PP 40, 6-7, but in others it looks more like 'the divine favour of the Buddha'; o.o. TT IV 12, in the astronomical texts TT VII 4, 10, 18,

etc. kut (and less often tôz) represents 'element' in the sense of the five elements, fire, water, earth, metal, and wood; Xak. xi kut
al-dawla va'l-cadd 'good fortune' (Hend.), when a man is called kutulq Kaş. I 320 (verse; the basic meaning of dawla is 'change, vicissitude', hence 'fortune' and esp. 'good fortune'); I 163 (1 uc-) and about 10 o.o.
translated dawla, cadd or baxt 'good fortune'.
KB küt, which is clearly syn. w. dawlat and is often associated with it, is in the title of Chap. XX (1045 ff.) Kut kıvılğı dawlat ırselikî 'the fickleness of fortune and the untrustworthiness of luck', is very common, commonest for 'good fortune', but 'majesty' is also common; the two are combined in

F xatun 'lady' and the like. Although attempts have been made to connect this word etymologically with xagan/xan there is no reasonable doubt that it is taken fr. Sogdian xwat'yn (xwat'ën); in Sogdian xat'y means 'lord, ruler' and xat'yin 'the wife of the lord, ruler', which is precisely the meaning of xatun in the early period. This should normally be transcribed xatun, although in Kaş the spelling is kaṭun in Turkish and xatun in Arabic. Survives in NE Tuv. kaday; SE Türk xatun/xotun; NC, NW katin; SC Uzb. xotin; SW Az. gadin, Osm. kadin meaning only 'married woman, wife' with a slightly honorific flavour. Kađir 'grim, brutal, oppressive, dangerous', and the like. The close phonetic and semantic resemblance to Ar. qâdir to which Kaş. calls attention has caused some confusion and it is consistently spelt kađir in the MS. of Kaş. but correctly as kađir in KB. Survives as kazîr in several NE languages R II 379; Khak. xazir; Tuv. kađir. See kaźîr Preliminary note. The phr. kađir kaṣ in Xak. suggests a connection with I kađ- but that V is Intrans. and can hardly be the base of this word. See Doerfer III 138. Katır 'mule'. A L.-w. in Mong. as kačir. Survives in SW Az., Tkm. ğatir; Osm. katır, but in all other language groups, except NE, where the word is unknown, the forms kačır/kaşır and the like are reborrowings fr. Mong., see Schcherbák, p. 95. It would prob. be fanciful to see an etymological connection between this word and 1 Kat- arising fr. the mule's mixed ancestry. L.-w. in Pe., etc., Doerfer III 1395. Xak. xi kačır al-bağlı 'mule' Kaș. I 364; a.o. III 302 (kişne-): KB (many horses in the fields) akurda katır 'mules in the stables' 5370: xiv Muḥ. al-bağlı kaṭır Mel. 70, 7; Rif. 181: Xwar. xin(? D kadrah (kadrak) Conc. N. in -k fr. *kadra-., Den. V. fr. kađar-; see kadran-. lit. 'something hard, rough', and the like. Survives as kayırak 'whetstone' in NC Kir., Kxz.; SC Uzb. (kayrak) and several NW languages (cf. bileğü). In NC Kir. it also means 'hard, unirrigated land', and in SW Osm. 'shifting sandy soil', which seems a further development of this concept, but in Osm. it now more often means 'slippery ground', perhaps owing to some confusion with 2 *kadra-. The translation in Kaš. is perhaps influenced by a supposed etymological connection with 1 Kat. L.-w. in Pe. and Mong. Doerfer III 1599. Xak. xi kadrah (MS. kadrah) ma'dīṣfurul-credul tan mā:būhānā 'folds and contortions in the mountains'; hence one says see kadak (kadrah) ditto Kaš. I 471; a.o. VUD kaṭar- pec. to Kaș. and described as the Turkish (i.e. Xak.) equivalent of kuṭar-, q.v.; prima facie a crisis of *kaṭar- Caus. f. of 2 *kad- or 2 kađ-, but the second -a- is a difficulty, perhaps a scribal error for -a- caused by a false analogy w. kaṭar-; see kaṭar- and katrūm. Xak. xi ol atiğ kaṭar:id raddāx-xayiwa xa sarafahā ‘an tachēhi ‘he turned the horse back and prevented it from going in the direction in which it was going’; similarly one says (o) yağqi: kaṭar:id: ‘he turned the enemy (etc.) back’ Kaš. I 74 (verse; katarur, kattarka:m); a.o. III 193 (kaṭar-) tattarmān I 517, 16 (see katar-).

D kađir- ‘to twist back, turn back (Trans.)’, and the like; presumably Caus. f. of 2 *kad-. S.im.m.l.g. as kuđer- and the like, except SW where kađir- is a Sec. f. of kdjīr-. Xak. xi ol anŋ boynñ kađir:d: ‘he twisted (lawwā) his neck’ (etc.); and one says ol anŋ soźin kađir:d: ‘he contradicted (or refuted, radda) his statement’ Kaš. II 76 (kaṭar:ra, kiṭar:ma:k); o.o. I 370, 22; 508; 2; II 74, 13; 164, 14 and I 144, 9, where the text is in some disorder: KB soźin kađirā körđīm ‘I tried to contradict (or refute) his statement’ 6244: xin(?) (of movement) ‘backwards’; (of time) ‘again, afresh’ 128: Kom. xiv ‘to take back’ kayra/kayrı/kayrı al- CGI; Gr.

D kaṭur- Caus. f. of 2 kat-; ‘to harden’, lit. or metaphor. S.im.m.l.g., not NE or SW. Xak. xi ol yumşak qaŋŋ: kiṭur:d: ‘he hardened (salabah) the soft thing’; as soft iron is annealed (yuğak) and one says ta:ş yēr an: kiṭur:d: ‘foreign countries (i.e. travel abroad) hardened him'), that is made him experienced (mucras muhakkak) Kaš. II 74 (katurur, katurmak); (katurgan in I 516 is an error for katgurman).

D kattur- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of 1 kat-; cf. katurr-. Xak. xi ol yp: katturdi: 'he ordered that the thread should be twisted (bi-falit'il-xayt! into the needle'; and one says ol talya:nka: ya:q katturdu: 'he had the parched grain mixed (acada) with oil'; also used of any two things when they are mixed (vulitit) Kaš. II 189 (katurur, kuturmak).

D kutar- See kurtagar-

VU kodur- (MS. kodur-, but between kadir and kefùr-) Hap. leg.?; morphologically obscure. Xak. xi ol bu: iska: kodurdi: 'he took great trouble (cadda) over this affair and made strenuous efforts over it' (halaqa fihi) Kaš. II 76 (kodurur, kodurmak); the word may also occur in I 144, 7 but is not translated there.

*kudur- See kuđruk, etc.

VUD 1 kutur- 'to pour out, empty', and the like; prima facie a crasis of *kuđur- Caus. f. of kuđ-; it is, however, odd that it survives as kotar- with the same meaning in NW Kk., Nog. and for 'to dish up (a meal)' in SW xx Anat. SDD 964, since this suggests an earlier form *kotor-. Xak. xi ol unug kutor: 'he poured (afraga) the flour from one vessel into another' Kaš. II 71 (kuturur, kuturmak); ka:b kutor: 'he emptied (faraga) the vessel of its contents' II 164, 16: kuturmu: ka:b 'an empty (mufrig) vessel' I 170, 6: KB sevinin tonu tut sakỉn cin kutur 'keep his joy full and pour away his anxiety' 117; a.o. 1455: Kom. xiv 'to pour out, empty' xotar- CC; Gr.: Kip. xiv garafa 'to dish up' (VU) kotur- Hou. 34, 5: xiv afraga (VU) kotar- (the vocalization is chaotic and partly lacking, but this seems the likeliest) Bul. 292: xv garafa't:am (VU) kotar- Kav. 74, 17; Tuh. 27a. 1: Osm. xiv to xvi (VU) kotar- (1) 'to empty'; (2) 'to dish up'; in several texts TTS I 487; III 479; IV 543.

(D) 2 kutur- 'to be excessive, exceed reasonable limits' in various applications. Morphologically obscure but cognate to kutur. S.i.a.m.i.g., usually 'to rave, be mad', and the like. Cf. Derfer III 1143. Uyğ. vii ff. Man. övke nizvani üze kuturur 'suffering from the passion of anger to excess' TT III 29-30: Xak. oğlan kuturdu: 'the boy was light-hearted and persisted in his wantonness' (irta:ha . . . wa lacca fi mucinihi); and one says tarig kuturdu: 'the crop, vegetation, etc. thrived' (zabda), originally (it meant) something 'exceeded its due measure' (evoeça 'an miqdûrî) Kaš. II 74 (Aor. omitted, kuturmak); kuturma: là ta:du tawrak 'do not behave outrageously' I 508, 3: xiv Muh. (?) batran 'pert, overbearing', and the like kuturmus Rif. 149 (only): Çağ. xv ff. kutur-

(D) kađirt- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of kađir- Xak. xi ol anıq boyin kađirti: alca 'unuqahu 'he had his neck twisted' Kaš. III 431 (kađirur, kađirtmak).

D katart- (katart-) Hap. leg.; vocalized as below; Caus. f. of katar- which was perhaps really katir-. Xak. xi ol atiq katarti: 'he ordered that the horse should be turned back' (bi-radd) Kaš. III 430 (kattrur, kattrmak; sic).

D kađrul- Pass. f. of kađir-; 'to twist' (Intrans.); to be twisted (Pass.). S.i.a.m.i.g. usually as kađrul-/kađirul-. Xak. xi anıq boyin: (mis-spelt bo:ynin) kađruldi: 'his neck twisted' (iltawâ), also used when it is twisted by someone else (altawâ layrûhu); Intrans. and Pass. (yata: adda wa la yata: adda) Kaš. II 235 (kađrilur, kađrilmak): Kip. xv layâ kayrîl- (and mayril-) Tuh. 32a. 12.

VUD 1 kuturul- Hap. leg.; Pass. f. of 1 kutur-. Xak. xi suv olmadin (MS. alma: din) kutruldi: 'the water (or any other liquid) was poured (afraga) from the jar' Kaš. II 234 (kuturulur, kutrulmak).

S 2 kutur- See kuturul-.

D kađran- Hap. leg.; Refl. f. of *kađra-, which s.i.a.m.i.g. except SW as kayra-/ kayra- 'to whet, sharpen' and, less often, 'to gnash the teeth'. See kađrak. Xak. xi be: apar kađrandi: 'the beg was furious (harida) with him and his conduct and dealings with him were harsh' (asura) Kaš. II 249 (kađranur, kađranmak: these two with -d-); a.o. II 267 (kađrulan-).

D kaṭrun- Refl. f. of katar-, lit. 'to turn oneself back'. The form suggests that the basic V. must have been katr- or kutur-; n.o.a.b. Uyğ. vii ff. Bud. (when he saw the demons King ÇaŠana) yüreken katrunup (assumed the form of the chief of the warriors) U 114, 15; v. G. translated 'steeling his heart', implying a Refl. f. of katur-; this may be right, though the word would be Hap. leg., but the narrative implies some change and 'change in his mind' seems likelier; Xak. xì kiler er katrundu: 'the laughing man stopped himself' (laughing; imtana:a); its origin is changing one's mind about something (al-harran fîl-amar); hence one says ol ma:na: yarmak beérür erkën katrundu: 'he was giving me money (etc.) and then changed his mind and refrained' (harina wa:mtna:a minhu) Kaš. II 249 (katrunur, katrunmak).

(E) kuturar- Atalay lists this as a Xak. word, but in fact Kaš. II 109, 21 ff. says that 'to save' might perhaps logically be kutrar- but is in fact kutgär- (kurtgär-) because kuturar-, particularly in the Aor. kutrur would have had too many *r*s in it.

D kaðr - Recip./Co-op. f. of kaðr; both forms Hap. leg. Xak. *x*1 ol menîp birîte: *booyun kaðr*ð: "he competed with me in twisting (fi layy) necks" (etc.) and one says ol ikki: *söz kaðr*ð: "they two contradicted (or refuted, radda) one another's statements" Kašt. II 218 (verse; no Nor. or Infin.); olar *ikki: booyun kaðr*ð: "they two competed in twisting necks" (etc.) III 194 (*kaðr*șur, *kaðr*șmak).

VUD 1 kutur - Hap. leg.; Co-op. f. of 1 kutur. Xak. *x*1 ol maça: *kař kutur*ð: 'he helped me to empty (fi ifrâq) the vessel' (etc.) Kašt. II 218 (*kutur*șur, *kutur*șmak).

D 2 kutur - Hap. leg.; Co-op. f. of 2 *kutur-. Xak. *x*1 ol gânia *kutur*ð: 'the boys played and enjoyed themselves (*la*ha ... toa nafați) Kašt. II 218 (*kutur*șur, *kutur*șmak).

VUD koðuru Gen. of koður - used as an Adv. qualifying V.s and less often Adj.s properly 'energetically, vigorously' and, more vaguely, 'extremely'. Pec. to Uyğ. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. munaça koðuru ûnci kay "lamenting so vigorously" U III 35, 27; a.o. 22, 17; koðuru tañ ürur listen attentively' TT VI 383; *Kuan. 176; koðuru tañna ürur are extremely marvellous" *Sivv. 348, 3; o.o. U II 7, 6 etc. (kolula-).

VUD *koður*çuk Hap. leg.; Dev. or Den. (?) N. origin obscure; al-kay is normally an A.N. meaning 'cunning, deceit', and the like, but must here be a Conc. N. meaning 'doll'. Cf. *kabarcak-. Xak. *x*1 koður*çuk* a doll (al-kay), that is models in the shape of people (tanați al sirati)-nâs which girls make to play with Kašt. I 501.

PUD *kuður*çak Hap. leg.; this word appears in a section headed fa-*d*al-al of words containing five consonants of which one is -w- or -y- e.g. bulgâyak, sarkayak but is spelt *kuður*çak or *kurur*çak; the meaning suggests that it is a Dev. N. fr. kuður-, and the text perhaps originally had *kuyur*çak. Xak. *x*1 *kuður*çak (?) *al-uy*us 'the tail-bone, coccyx' Kašt. III 179.

D *kuður*gak Pec. to Kašt.; Dev. N. fr. kuður-. Xak. *x*1 *kuður*gak ahad zaylayl-gabâ *kâf*în(n) 'one of the two skirts of a robe at the back' Kašt. I 502; a.o. I 17, 3.

PUD *kaðr*gân perhaps Dev. N. (connoting repeated action); since both in the Brahmi texts and Uyğ. script the same letter is used for t and d it is uncertain whether it is derived fr. katr- or kaðr-, both of which are semantically possible. N.o.a.b. Türkî vii see kaðr-. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. Sanskrit kiññâka a kind of tree, Trichosanthes dioecae TT VIII A 39 (spelt kàrtãhî); xiv Chin.-Uyğ. Diet. huâi 'Sophora japonica, a kind of acacia' (Giles 5,028) *R II 327; Legrl., p. 159 (transcribed ha-ti-èr-hôn *kaðr*gân or kan).

PU *kuttu*ðan See *kakur*çan.

D *kuður*ma: Hap. leg.; Pass. Dev. N. presumably fr. 2 kuður--; the cap in question may be that worn by high Uyğ. dignitaries with vertical peaks described by v. G. in 'Die Dreizack-Kappe uigurischer Würendräger', UAJ 36 (1964), p. 331. Xak. *x*1 *kuður*ma: *bo*řk 'a cap which has two peaks (or flaps, canânâ, lit. 'wings') in front and behind' Kašt. I 490.

D *kaðr*lan- Refl. Dev. N. fr. kaðr; survives in NE Sag., Sor, Tel. kaðr*lan* - 'to rage, to be angry' R II 380. (Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. this word has been misread for *kað*lan- in R II 46, 58, see kin-); Xak. *x*1 er *kaðr*lanidi: 'the man pretended that he had a harsh nature' (*asura tab*ûhu*); its origin is *kaðr*indi: (mis-spelt kaðrind); and this is more correct (așahh) Kašt. F xagâni a title of great antiquity taken over by the Türkü in the specific sense of 'an independent ruler of a tribe or people'. Its earlier history is discussed by Pulleyblank in Asia Major IX, Part 2, pp. 260 ff. It is first noted in an immediately recognizable form as a royal title of the Juan-juan and T'u-yu-hun round about a.d. 400, but Pulleyblank believes that a Hsiung-nu royal title hu-yu (Ancient Chinese gwa-yooy) mentioned in connection with events at the end of the 1st century B.C. is an earlier Chinese transcription of the same word. In Türkü and Uyg. texts it is habitually transcribed xagan, but as both x- and k- would have been represented by the same letter in these texts it was almost certainly xagâni. The relationship between it and xan, which is practically synonymous, w. i., is obscure; the two cannot morphologically be connected in Türkü but may have been alternative forms in the languages from which they passed to Türkü. It became an early 1.-w. in Mong. as xagan/ka'ana (Haemisch 54-6) and re-entered Çag, in the latter form. It was Arabized as xagân at an early date and in that form remained one of the imperial titles until the dissolution of the Ottoman Empire. Türkü xagâni is very common; it is normally used of the Türkü ruler himself, but also of the Emperor of China, tavgâ xagan I N 12, the King of Tibet Tüjit xagan I N 12, and junior members of the royal family installed as the rulers of subject Türkü tribes. Türges xagan, Kirkiz xagan I N 13; Uyg. xagân was the title assumed by Uyg. rulers when they became independent in a.d. 742 Sui, I N 1, etc.: xiv ff. koğuş Preliminary note. Prima facie this word is a Dev. N. in -uş, but there is no trace of *koğ-, and even if this was taken to be an alternative form of kov- there is no semantic connection. Equally it seems impossible to find a common basis for the two meanings of the word.

?D 1 koğuş 'leather'; n.o.a.b. Cf. Kön. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. (just as a sound constantly arises from a drum by the combined action of the wood) koğuşka 'the leather' (the drumstick and the hand) Swu. 375, 7-8; Civ. koğuş

D kanı̇g n.o.a.b.; prima facie a Dev. D konak/konuk (konok) Preliminary note. There is no reasonable doubt that etymologically the words meaning 'millet' and 'guest' and the like are identical, both representing an Intrans. Pass. Dev. N. fr. kın-, in the first case in the sense of 'something planted in the ground'. Both became early l.-ws in Mong. as konok (konôg) (Haenisch 60, Kow. 868), and survive in the same forms in modern languages, but it is more convenient to list them separately.

D 1 konak (konok) some sort of cereal, originally 'millet', of which there are several kinds, but now sometimes used for other sorts. The normal Ar. word for 'millet' is al-dâ:yn (see üyür, tariğ), al-câ:war:as is a l.-w. fr. Persian gâ:war, also 'millet', perhaps of a different kind. Survives in NE Tuv. konok 'timothy grass'; Se Türkî konok 'maize'; NC Kir. konok 'Italian millet' (in some places 'maize; sorghum'); SC Uzb. kûnok ditto; NW Kk. konak 'a particular kind of millet'. kaplı: 'wagon, cart, carriage', and the like. There is also a Tribal Name Kaplı: and it is an open question whether the tribe was so called because it used carts, or whether, as is more probable, carts were so called because the Kaplı, a western tribe, were the first Turks to use them, see Clauson, 'The Name Uyğur', J.R.A.S., 1963, p. 147. 2 kîr (ʔkîr) ‘grey’ and the like, particularly as the colour of a horse’s coat. Survives in NE Koib., Şag., Şor kîr R II 734; SW Az. ǧîr; Osm. kîr; Tkm. ǧîr. L.-w. in Pe., etc., Doerfer III 1506. Cf. boz, çał: Xak. xı kîr al-at-farâsu–l-samand ‘a dun (Pe. l.-w.) horse’ Kaš. I 324: Çaq. xv ff. kîr . . . 2 kor apparently both 'the residue of sour milk used to make yogūr and (baker's) yeast, leaven'. Survives in the first meaning in SW Tkm. ġor and in the second in NE Bar.; NC Kxx., Tarā R II 549, and Kūr. Xak. xī kor: xamirulʿ-rāṭib 'the solids in (sour) milk', that is the residue of curdled milk (rubāba minaʾl-rāʾibīl-mudirik aslīl-amisīʾl-hāmīd) which is left in the bottom of a jar; then fresh milk is poured on it so that the solids are coagulated and sour milk (yogūr) is made Kās. 2 kur meaning rather indefinite, basically perhaps 'rank' (as in 'high rank') and 'stage' (one of a number), hence 'a line, a course of brickwork', and the like. In texts like KB it is easily confused with 1 kur, and some of the medieval translations are hard to fit into this framework though they seem to belong here. Survives at any rate in SE, SW. Cf. kurdaš-. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. (faith is the primary requirement) kut bulmuş tütünler kurında kezгинte barımakn 'of the progress of good men who have found divine favour through the various stages (of existence)' TTV 20, 6; (if they intend to embark) burxan kutuğh (ic) kruka kezgi ke 'on the stages (leading) to the blessed state of Buddha' 22, 25: Xak. xī kur al-marṭaba 'rank'; hence one says menin kurum uluğ 'I have a high (āṣima rank) Kās. 3 kur this might be an unusual abbreviation of kurug as Kās. suggests; but it is more prob. that it was inferred to provide a (false?) etymology for kurbaka; q.v. Oğuz xī kur al-yābis 'dry'; an abbreviation of kurug; prov. kulān kuuşğaga: tutšše kurbaka: ayğur bolur 'if a wild ass falls into a well, the land frog (al-ğīdīaʾl-barri, i.e. toad?) becomes a stallion' Kās. III 122; xii(? ) Tef. (wherever that fish went) kuruğ yol 'the dry road' (behind him disclosed him ... they went after him) kur yérde 'on dry land' 217 (perhaps a simple graphic error).

F kara: 'to look at', exactly syn. w. bak-. This common Mong. V., noted as early as xii (Haemisch 69), is first noted in Turkish in Çağ. 266, 21, with the alternatives karas- / karala- , and s.i.a.m.l.g. except SW. There is no reason to suppose that it is a native Turkish word and the base of I karak. Karap, translated 'looking at him', was read by R in Usp. 97, 3, but is certainly one of several mistranscriptions in this text. The supposed occurrence in Kom. (R II 142) rests on a misreading by Kuun of the entry of kari:, q.v.

karga: ‘a watch-tower with a beacon on the top to give raid warnings’. Kaş’s alternative form karga: is Hap. leg. but perhaps an earlier form, since in II E 37 the word looks more like karga: than anything else and an evolution kargûn > kargûnu > karga: is quite plausible. Türkî viii Selege: köçi: yoripan karga: (?): kisita: marching down the Selenga river I blockaded the watch-towers’ (and destroyed their dwellings and movable property there) II E 37; karga: T 34 (edgûtu); 53 (olğurt): Uyû. viii Kemb(?): karga: ‘at the watch-tower of Kem(?);’ should perhaps be read in Şu. 'scraped' i.e. to a particular shape. In Ar.
xarajat means 'to turn (on a lathe)' and maxrūt normally 'conical', but with 'ball' it must mean 'spherical'. Survives in SW Az. girma 'pellet, shot'; Osm. karma 'pleat, fold, crease;

F kurnam 'bow-case'; there is an apparent methodological connection with kuruğuluk, same but the word itself, which is which in, seems to be a corruption of
pe. qurğu:ın, and that word, though not so far praced in Ar. with this meaning, seems to be derived fr. qaraba, which inter alia means 'to put (something) in a sheath or case'. The word seems therefore to be by origin Ar., or at any
e. e Pe.-Ar., and one of a number of such words in Oğuz (see 2 turma:), and the connection with kuruğuluk illusory. The long note on the word in P. Pelliot, Notes sur l'histoire de la Horde d'Or, Paris, 1950, p. 42, must be corrected accordingly. See also the discussion of Pe. qurbān in Dener fer 1451. N.o.a.b.

kuy Preliminary note. Kuy 'the women's apartments, the private part of a dwelling', a l.-w. fr. Chinese kuei, same meaning (Giles 6,410; Middle Chinese ku) is very common in O. Kir. and occurs in Türkî viii ff. Yen. It is also prob. that it reappears in Uyğ. as kuy, but Müller transcribed this as kün, and was perhaps right, see 2 kün. It is possible that, with their different social arrangements, the Turks took this l.-w. as meaning merely 'a secluded spot' and that 2 kuy below is the same word.

VUD kuyag Dev. N./A. fr. kay- (2 *ka-d-); the existence of this word is doubtful; in the entry in Kaş. the qif carries a fatha and the ya' is unvocalized, but this entry follows kuyag and the normal order of words with the same consonants in Kaş. is the usual one, fatha, damma, kasra; in this position therefore kiyag, a Sec. f. of kiđag, would be expected, and the resemblance between the translations of this word and kiyag in Kaş. makes this all the more probable. The word in Vel., if correctly translated, is more likely to be a Pass. Dev. N./A., but San. does not mention this meaning and lists only kuyak (kayaguk), and it is very prob. that Vel.'s is a mistranslation. D kiyag (*kiγag) Pass. Dev. N./A. fr. kiy- 'crooked, cut on a slant', and the like. Easily confused with kyyag (kiγag) in some modern languages. NE Tel. kiyag 'anger' R II 716; Khak. xiyag 'injury, insult' may belong here; the word certainly survives in SW Osm. kiyag 'minced, chopped up' (the translation 'fainting fit' in R II 716 is not confirmed elsewhere); Tkm. γiyag 'crooked'. Uyğ. viif ff. Civ. kımnıŋ kozin ağizin yel tarpıp kiyag kilmış eser 'if a man's eyes or mouth are made crooked by demoniacal possession' (i.e. a paralytic stroke) H I 134. Xak. xi 'a breach of promise' (zulməl'waw) is called kiyag; and it is used as an Adj. INITIAL POST-PALATAL PLOSIVES

Preliminary note. As pointed out in Studies, pp. 131, etc. there is good evidence that, although in Türkü there was only one, unvoiced, Post-palatal initial, and the position was prob. the same in Uyg. and Xak., in an earlier stage of the language both voiced and unvoiced Post-palatal initials existed. Where such evidence exists regarding a particular word, (¬) is added after the heading.

küvec survives in SW Az. küvec; Osm. güvec 'a flat, shallow earthenware cooking pot'. The exact meaning in Xak. is obscure; as Brockelmann points out al-nayraki is an error for al-nayyaki (Dozy II 631); the meaning is prob. 'a curb bit'. The connection between the two meanings is obscure. The spelling with -w- in Kaş. is deliberate, since it is under the heading 'fa'al mina'l-waw, but cf. küveçiliğ. The word may be foreign; cf. kuzeq. Xak. xi küveç yügüün al-lizamūn'li-nayzaki (so read) 'a curb bit' (JJ) Kaṣ. kek practically syn. w. 1 oṣç and in the early period generally used in Hend. w. it; originally prob. 'malice, spite, secret hatred'; thence 'a desire for revenge', and finally 'revenge' and other extended meanings. Survives as kek in NC Kır., Kzx.: SC Uzb. and several NW languages. Uyğ. viii ff. Man. TT II 17, 84-5 (1 ḍīb): Bud. U II 23, 13-14 (1 ḍīb): Xak. xi kek al-hīq 'malice'; hence one says ṭepli kekli̇g kīsī: xalībū l-hīq wa-l-ŷ̇j 'a malicious, revengeful man' Kaş. PU kek Hap. leg.; an Exclamation. At the end of the section containing this and similar Mon.s Kaş, says that they are pronounced . . . keh . . . in rapid speech, but not in writing and that the -h is (silent) like the hā'ūl-istirāha in Ar. of which examples are quoted; the word should therefore perhaps be transcribed ke: Xak. xī kek kek 'an Exclamation (harp) used in calling a dog' Kaj. III 118.

kōk, etc. Preliminary note. There is great difficulty in determining how many early Turkish words of this general form there were and what were the qualities of their vowels and final consonants. Nureddin had the same difficulty, see the quo. fr. the Muhākāmatu-l-lūgātayn in Vel., p. 370 (top) where five alternative meanings are given:—sky, melody, seam, cauterization (see 4 kōk) and vegetation*. After the correction mentioned under kek has been made Kaj. lists three words with a short vowel and ten (some alternative meanings of the same word) with a long one. The first three mean 'pain, suffering' (kūk or kūğ?); 'root' (kōk) and ‘thong’ (kōk) respectively. There is also another apparently early word meaning ‘seam’ or the like (kōk). If this really is the word in Uyg. it can hardly be a l.-u. fr. Pe. kūk ‘basting’, and in that event the Pe. word may be a Turkish l.-w., but the status of the word is a little uncertain. Of the second ten the first (and so presumably the next six) are described as ending in -g, and the eighth (and so presumably the other two) as ending in -k. The first two ‘metre’ and ‘melody’ are alternative translations of the same word kūğ and the third a ‘popular joke’ is probably an extended meaning of it. The fourth and fifth relating to animals were also certainly kūğ. The sixth and seventh, 'rust' and 'freckles', must be alternative translations of the same word which does not seem to be traceable elsewhere, but was perhaps kūğ. The eighth and ninth 'sky' and 'sky coloured' are alternative translations of kōk. The last entry is a phr. meaning 'a village headman' otherwise traced only in KB; it is possible that the first element is the same word as the preceding.

1 kōk 'root, origin', lit. and metaph.; described by Kaj. as Oğuz/Kip. but occurs in KB; survives in NE Tuv.: SW Az., Osm., Tkm. cf. tūb, tūz, yīltz. Türkü vii E 3, H 2 (7, oksz): Xak. xī KB bular erdi dīn ham sāri at kōk 'these were the root of the faith and religious law' 59; iki neğ turur așlı yıldız kōk 'his food was the roots of plants' 6055; 0.0. 318 (kaz.), 821, 2015, 2183, 5907: XIII(7) At. kōk körkleğ erinp xūn körkleğ ol 'a man of fine family has a fine disposition' 317. Tef. kōk 'lineage, origin, root' 182: XIV Muh. 2 kōk 'thong' and the like. Survives in NC Kir.; NW Kk. kōk 'a leather thong used to hold together the framework of a yurt; a narrow thong used by cobblers'. Xak. xī kōk rabbu'-l-sar 'the thong fastening a saddle'; prov. er sōžli: bir eder kōk; üç 'it is a sign of manliness to have one word and not to go back on it, just as there are three thongs on a saddle-bow (rabt hami'l-sar); if there were one more the saddle-bow (al-qarbus) would break because of the excessive number of holes in it, and if there were less, the two thongs would not take the weight of a man Kaj. II 283.

3 kōk 'seam' or the like. Survives in NE Alt., Tel. kōk 'seam' R II 1221; (Tuv.) kōkte 'to sew (together), to file (papers) and the like': SC Uzb. kōk 'basting, oversewing'. Uyg. viii ff. Giv. 4 kōk (g-) basically 'the sky'; hence 'sky-coloured, blue, blue-grey', etc.; for a similar range of colours cf. yazı. S.i.a.m.l.g. in both meanings except NE, where it has only the second (various Sec. s of tept: reborrowed fr. Mong. being used in the first); in SW Osm. gōk (before vowels gōg ...): Tkm. gōk (gōg ...); these forms and Az. kōy suggest that, in spite of Kaj.'s categorical statement that the final was -k, the original form may have been gōg. See Doerfler III 1677. Türkü viii uze: kōk tepti: asra: yazıs yer klinintkiada: 'when the blue sky above and the brown earth below were created' I E 1, I E 2; kōk teylin grin 'their grey squirrel skins' II N 12, S 12; kōk (VU) 6 nam of a river T 15; (I E 3, I E 4, see oksz): viii ff. kōk yūrin taş 'a blue white stone' Toy. 5 (ETY II 57): 0.0. do. 21; Irk B 64 (buymul): Man. uze on kat kōk asra segiz (sic) kat yer 'the ten-fold skies above and the eight-fold earth below' Chaus. 42-4: Uyg. viii ff. VUF 1 kűg: 'Song, melody', and the like; L.-w. fr. Chinese ch`ii, Middle Chinese k`ok, 'song' (Giles 3.062). Survives in most N.E. languages; NC Kır., Kız.; SC Uzb. as kü, küy, kü; L.-w. in Pe. as kû in such phr. as kû kardan 'to tune (an instrument)'. Uyg. viii ff. Man. tükedi Afrin Çor Tegen kûgi 'here ends Afrin Çor Tegen's hymn' M II 8, 19; a.o. VU 2 kûg immediately follows the two entries of 1 kûg, and is probably merely an extended meaning of that word, since there is a similar combination of meanings in Khak. Xak. xı kûg the word for any 'joke' (afluha) which circulates among the people of any town during some year and is passed from mouth to mouth; hence one says bu: yi: kûg keldi: 'this year's joke has arrived' Kaş. III 131.

D 3 kûg no doubt Dev. N./A. fr. kül; survives only (?) in NC Kız. kûy 'the tending of livestock'; this word also means 'the condition of livestock', which may belong here, or be an attenuated meaning of 4 kûg. Xak. xı kûg yulku: al-dabbatu`l-marwa`a acma 'cattle driven out to pasture in a herd' Kaş. III 131 (followed by a verse illustrating 1 kûg).

4 kûg survives in the NC Kır. phr. kûg: kel- (of sheep and other female animals) 'to be on heat, ready to be mated'; Kız. kûy (see 3 kûg) seems to have the same meaning, cf. küylo- (of cattle, sheep and dogs) 'to mate' R II 1420. Xak. xı kûg sfadu`lu-kahs wa`l-\- meaning obscure; it is not therefore possible to say whether kôk: in this phr. has one of its normal meanings. Xak. xı kôk ayûk (spelt as one word, but immediately follows 4 kôk: 'the title given to the headmen of villages and Türkmen (tribes)' (akbîrîatu-l-rasâîq wa`lranms and wild animals in the mating season in winter'; hence one says köy küğî: boldî: 'the mating season for sheep (etc.) has arrived'.

Kas. III 132.

PU kük: Hap. leg. in both senses; for 'rust' the ordinary words are bas and 2 tat; there is no generally accepted Turk. word for 'freckle'; SW Osman. uses çil, but most languages use words derived, with some phonetic changes, fr. Mong. sebüyl. Xak. xi kük 'the rust' (al-tib'; MS. tab') which forms on the surface of a mirror; hence one says köşprüke: kük tüstî: 'greeness (al-xudra) and rust have formed on the surface of the mirror': kük 'freckles' (al-kalafa) which appear on the faces of women (etc.) Kas. III 132.

PU kük (or 6 küg) 'suffering, distress'; prob. n.o.a.b.; R II 1417 notes a NC Kxx.(?) phr. küy kör- 'to suffer pain, or distress', but there is no other trace of it and there are in NC several words with a similar meaning which go back to kün-. See kümkem. Uyg. viii ff. Civ. köşprü içinde kük yok köpülıg içinde kadû: yok 'there is no pain in your eyes or anxiety in your mind' TT I 144-5: Xak. xi kük (misvocalized keh) al-mîhna 'distress, suffering'; hence one says kük (ditto) körðî: er 'the man suffered pain' (intahana) Kas. D kökle-: etc. Preliminary note. Kaş. lists Den. V.sfr. 3 kök and 1 and 3 küg: and Refl. Den. V.sfr. 1 kök and 5 küg: the basic form of the first survives in NE. There is in KB a Den. V.sfr. 4 kök: There is in Uyğ. vii ff. Man.-A M III 29, 10 (iii) a word köكلیر of which the meaning is entirely obscure. These seem to be the only early words of this form. San. 307r. 26 lists a Den. V.fr. 2 kök which s.i.s.m.l.

D 1 kökle-: Den. V.fr. 3 kök: ‘to fasten with thongs’. Survives in NC Kir. köktö- and perhaps some other languages unless these are Den. V.sfr. 2 kök. Xak. xi ol eder kökli: ḥadda roṭbâl-l-sarc ‘he tightened the thongs of the saddle’ Kaş. III 300 kökle- (köllekir, köklemek).

D 2 kökle-: (g-) Den. V.fr. 4 kök: ‘to be blue, grey, green, etc.’ Survives in NC Kir. kökttö-: SC Uzb. kikla- and perhaps elsewhere, but kökter-, q.v., is commoner in this sense. Xak. xi KB (hear the words of) kirt köklemiš ‘the old greyheaded man’ 1492.

D 1 külge-: Den. V.fr. 1 küg: ‘to sing’ and the like. Survives in NC Kir. köl-:küylö- ‘to tune’ (a musical instrument): SW Osm. kökle- ditto (unless the latter is a Den. V. fr. Pe. kük). Xak. xi er kökli: taqânnâl- racul bi-iğniya wâ axraca lahîn fil-înâ ‘the man sang a song and brought out the melody in singing it’ Kaş. III 301 kögle- (külgle, külglemek): Çağ. xv ff. D 2 kükge-: Den. V.fr. 3 kög: ‘to graze’. As pasture is green there was an obvious temptation to regard this V. as identical with 2 kökle-; this seems to be at the back of the entry kökle- ‘to graze, put cattle out to graze’ in Vâm. 330, reproduced in R II 1227 as Çağ. Bokhara; but the Reff l. külge- (of cattle) ‘to be well-nourished’ in NE Kz. preserves the earlier form. Xak. xi yîkki: kökledî: šibaqalatîl-dâvâbba wa akalatîl-rabî ‘the cattle grazed and eat the spring pasture’ Kaş. III 300 (külgle, külglemek).

D kökle-: Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of 1 kökle-: this V. is listed under the cross-heading -D- (for the third consonant) which suggests that the original entry had köklet-; the alternative form is morphologically inexplicable. The -d- suggests that the original form of 3 kök was kög but the modern NC forms do not support this. See sigu-t-. Xak. xi ol eder yalığın kökletli: ‘he ordered that the straps of his saddle-how should be tightened’ (bi-sadd); kökkedî: (sic) alternative form (luğâ) Kaş. II 327 (kökkeltûr, kökklemek).

kölli- (g.) the basic meaning seems to be 'to be shabby, or shaded' (Intrans.) and also perhaps 'to shade, give shade to' (Trans.). In the latter sense it survives in NE Tel. kölo- R II 1270, and Khak. köle-; it is the origin of kölit-, kölik, köllige: (the parallel series kösik-, kösik, kösilge: seems to be an example of an I/5 relationship in Standard Turkish). The meanings of kölli-, köllit- in Xak. perhaps represent its use as a euphemism for körm- 'to bury.' Uyğ. vii ff. Bud. Sanskrit (sutra- 'like a child' ogol teg); paripatipī 'and protected, guarded' kölip (sic) yeme: TT v/II D.38 (a metaphor. usage?): Xak. xii ölg köllit: 'he buried (dafana) the dead man' (etc.) Kaş. kim properly only the Interrogative Pron. 'who?', parallel to ne: 'what?', but, unlike ne; never used as an Interrog. Adj. The concept of Relative Prosns. was entirely foreign to Turkish, in which Participles and the like are used where Indo-European languages use Relative Prosns.
but when the Turks became acquainted with such languages, and religious works in them began to be translated into Turkish, usually by persons whose native language was not Turkish, kim came to be used as a Relative Pron., and, hastened by the phonetic resemblance, in all the meanings of Pe. ki and other cognate Iranian words, including the Conjunction ‘that’. Vudy könl (or) in a note on V.s ending in -k- Kaş. says that these fall into two classes; (a) basic V.s like aşuk- and çilüük-; (b) V.s in which the Suff. indicates that the Subject of the V. is unable to achieve his desires, like basîk- der. fr. basu-, usuk- der. fr. us-, kirk- and this V. The first two are Emphatic/Pass. forms, but kirk- is a Den. V. fr. kîr, and it is likely that this V. too, which has a dama over the kâf is a Den. V., since there is obviously no semantic connection with köm, and the obvious explanation is that it is a Den. V. fr. 2 kén. The only other known occurrence is in KB 4389 where the Fergana MS. has kimle, the Cairo MS. kîgâpše and the Vienna MS. has a word which might be kënıkse but looks more like könikse Xak. xı er kënıklti: (MS. könikte) gâlaba 'alâl-racûli, -câf hättî ta'axxara 'an aşhâbî' the man was overcome by weakness, so that he fell behind his companions' Kaş. xiv and xv kırtın- 'to believe, rely on' in four texts TTS I 471; III 460; IV 524.

D körtür- (g-) 'to show'; Caus. f. of körw. euphonic -t- inserted. It and the shortened form körtür- are n.o.a.b. A new word görset-, which can be regarded as a Sec. f. of this word, appeared in the medieval period; the early occurrences are listed below. Another new word şor- is first noted in Osm. xiv. and xv, three texts TTS II 456; III 312; IV 357. The other early Caus. f.s of kör- are körtür- and körgit-, q.v. There is a remarkable variety of modern forms, some languages having two or three. Usually these are completely syn., but, for example, in SE Türk körgiz- means 'to help to see' (e.g. with the help of glasses) and körset- 'to show', and in SW Az. kördür- means 'to order someone to see to, i.e. do (something)' and köster- (a metathesis of körset-?) 'to show, demonstrate'. The modern forms, nearly all meaning 'to show', are as follows: NE Alt., Leb., Sag., Şor, Tel. körgiz-; Küür. körkös- R II 1262; Kaç., Käs., Şor körtüs-; Şor körtös- 1265; Khat. kördür-/körçis-; Tuv. körgüz-; SE Tar. körket- 1260; körgüz- 1262; körset- 1265; Türk körgüz-/körset-; NC Kir. kördür-/körçiz-/körset-; Kax. körgüz-/körset-; SC Uzg. körgüz-/körset-; NW Kar. T. körgüz- R II 1262; Kaç. körstēt-; Kk., Şor körgüz-; Kumyk şörset-; SW Az. kördür-/körset-; Osm. görüz- (Red.: obsolete)/görset-; Tkm. gördür-/görekez-. Uyg. viii ff. Man. M III 26, 11 (i) (odağurau); 39, 1-3 (ii) (adağurau); Bud. körtür-occurs nearly 50 times in Kuan. esp. in such phr. as (Kuan-iim usmur) burxanlar kör- körgürür 'shows the forms of the Buddhas' (to those mortals) 103-4; in four places it is mis-spelt körtür- and in U II 19, 11 (which is Kuan 128) körtür-; a.o. TT VI 287: (Xak.) xiv Muh.(?) arən'-l-say 'he showed me the thing' görğürül: Rfj. 103 (only); Xwar. xiv(? ) men sańska başlap yonl körgürürmen 'I will lead you and show you the way' Oğ. 221-2: xiv körgüz-/körgüz- 'to show' Qutb 101; MN 429: Kom. xiv 'to show' körgüz- CCI, CCG; Gr. 154 (quotns.). D körk (g.) - Dev. N. fr. kör-; basically 'something visible; shape, form', and the like; but by xi 'something worth seeing', hence 'beauty' in an abstract sense. Survives only (?) in NL Tel. körk R 11261: SC Uzb. körk; NW Kk. körk; Nog. körk; SW Tkm. görk; Uyg. VIII ff. D kürük (g-) Pass. Dev. N./A. fr. kër-; lit. 'stretched out', hence 'broad, long'. Survives only in NC XIX Kzr. kérk (of journey) 'long' R II 1096 (not in the xx dict.). In Kaş the word, although vocalized kérk, rhymes with sevük, nelük, bedük and must originally have been kürük which is morphologically correct. Xak. xi in a verse containing several corruptions translated 'my friend, how did you get to us and cross the long deserts (al-mafťawwa'l-madidda) and yayaz: kürük (MS. bala: kérk) 'high mountains', Kaş I 94, 3: n.m.e.

D körük (g-) Dev. N. fr. kör-; 'observer, spy'. Pec. to Türkü?. Türkü VIII Oğuzdan-tan körük kelti: 'a spy came from the Oğuz' T 8; o.o. T 9, 29, 33; in each case a phr. like 'their report (sav) was so-and-so' follows.

D körük 'bellows'; this might be a Dev. N. (N.I.), but the only authority for körü- 'to blow with the bellows' is Red. 1589 and this may be merely a back-formation. S.i.a.m.l.g. except SC; SW Tkm. körük (prob. a false long vowel). The only meaning of körük in Vel. and the second meaning in San. is 'a hen which has stopped laying'; this meaning survives in SW Tkm. körük; in San. 305r. 26 it is said that the word, prob. kürk/kürük, is described as Persian in the Burhan-i Qâd'; this is prob. correct; it does not seem to be Turkish. Xak. xi körük al-himlîve ta mânfak-xelâdâd 'a blacksmith's bellows' (Hend.) Kaş I 391: XII(?). Tef. ditto 186: XIV Muh. mânfak göürük Mel. 61, 10; körük Rif. 160: Çag. xv ff. körük (spelt) (1) dam-i haddâd 'a blacksmith's bellows' San. 305v. 21: Kom. xiv 'bellows' körük CCI; Gr.

kerki: 'an adze'. Survives with this meaning in SE Türk: NC Kır.: al-qaddâm has other meanings ('axe, hatchet'), but the word prob. always meant 'adze'. No obvious Turkish etymology, perhaps a l.-w. Xak. xi kerkî: al-qaddâm Kaş I 430: XIV Muh. PUF körge: almost the only Gancak word which is not Hap. leg.; prob. a l.-w., but not, like kendük, demonstrably Iranian. Survives (?) in NW Krm körge 'cup' R II 1251. Gancak xi körge: 'a dish (al-tabag) made of wood' Kaş. I 430: Çağ. xv ff. körge (tor körge; 'with k- and -g') 'a table (sandali) on which decanters, jugs, and cups are put at a feast'; also 'a wine decanter or jug' (zaraf zafarı...behele ma'nâsna) Vel. 367 (quotns.); körge (spelt) 'a table (kuri) on which jugs and wine decanters are placed' (same quotns.); the Rûmi author made a mistake in translating it 'jug, decanter' San. 305v. 4.

D körkü (g-) Dev. N. fr. kör-; lit. 'the act of thinking or being', or a rare term that seems to survive only in SW Osöm. görgü 'experience, breeding, good manners' (fr. kör- in the sense of 'to experience something'); Tkm. görgü/ görgü 'pain, suffering' (cf. the Türkü phr. l emge kör- 'to experience suffering'). Tef. (he gave the greatest of them) Işâ yalanaca'n körgünük 'the appearance of the prophet Jesus' 185.

D körkdes: Hap. leg.¿; N. of Assocen. fr. körk; 'of the same shape, a replica'. In a note on this passage, Hünv.-tr., p. 25, note 156, t.G. suggests that the word actually means nirmânakaya, the first of the Buddha's three bodies, the 'shadow body' which he can assume for certain purposes; this seems to be a mistake; the replicas were no doubt nirmânakâyas, but the Turkish for that word was belgûrmete (q.v.) etöz. Uyg. VIII ff. Bud. (just as the Buddhâs, when they have entered nirvâna, by exercising their authority to ask for divine favour, in accordance with the wishes of mankind, by various distinguished rebirths) yarulmuş körkdeslerin orun orun sayyaka kodur yarlıkap 'deign to place their shining replica in all places. Suv. 64. 6 ff.

D kergek (kergek; g-) N./A.S. in -fr. kerge-; 'necessity, necessary'. Became kergek by elision of the -g- at an unusually early date. C.i.a.p.a.l.; NW Kumyk; SW Osöm., Tkm. kergek. Apart fr. its ordinary meanings, it is used in various idioms including (1) as a sort of Aux. V. meaning 'must' after (a) the Infinit.; (b) Participles in -miş/-miş and -gû/-gûb, and later (c) the Conditional; (g) kergek ... kergek 'either ... or', in which the original meaning has completely evaporated; (3) for 'stint', cf. kerge-; kergeksiz. Türkü VII occurs only in the phr. kergek bul- 'to meet one's fate, die' I E 4, 10; IN 10; IX 23 (uvul): VIII ff. ?D körkle: 'beautiful'; prima facie a Den. N./A. fr. körk, but there is no other trace of a Den. Suff. -le; and of the existence of a syn. word körtle: suggests that both may be representations of some foreign word and the semantic connection w. körk a coincidence. Pec. to Uyg. Uyg. viii ff. Xak. əl yig₂ qaqa: (error for kanka:) körü: the young man was full (imtala') of blood and fat', so that he radiated gaiety (abdā min nafšī'll-mucūn). The origin is that a vessel is filled with something, then after a short time (the contents) expand (intafaxa) until they exceed the limit of fullness (zāda 'an haddī' '-intilä'); for example, when it is mixed with a lot of yeast and put in a dish and almost fills it, and is then left for a short time, expands till it overflows the rim of the dish (kürsēr, kürsme:k—MS. kürsme:ek). D kezîl (ğ-) Dev. N. fr. kez-; with a rather wide range of meanings, none very closely related to those of kez-, of which the basic connotation seems to be intermittence, 'a turn (which comes from time to time); an intermittent illness'. The word is spelt keziall in TT VIII and rhymes with isîl in KB which seems to confirm the -g,- but some modern forms point to an alternative final -k, perhaps going back to a parallel form kezêk, a Dev. N. in -ek, but it is impossible to associate particular meanings with these alternatives. Survives in SE Türkî közîk 'typbus' BS 524: NC Kir., Xx. kezêk/kezîl: 'turn'; kezill 'fever'; SC Uzb. küzen 'polecat'; a very old word, a First Period 1.-w. in Mong. as kuren (Kow. 2636, Haldod 237) and Hungarian as gérény; the suggestion, see Doerfer I 328, that this word is connected w. D közünük (g-) Dev. N. (Conc. N.) fr. közün-; 'a window'. There is a morphological and semantic difference between this and közek, q.v., -ük being properly a Pass. (or, for Intrans. V.s, an Intrans.) Suff.; this word must therefore lit. mean 'something which is seen', perhaps with the application of 'something which is seen from within the building' rather than 'something you see out of'; the later meaning 'aperture' and the like is obviously a metaphor. It is generally believed, and is no doubt true, that no native Turkish word begins with 1-; all the words listed below are either demonstrably l.-w.s or of a kind which might reasonably be supposed to be l.-w.s. It is also possible that there are some l.-w.s listed above in which the initial l- is preceded by a prothetic vowel. If so, these would be parallel to the l.-w.s with initial r- preceded by a prothetic vowel, see R. Some Chinese and Indian l.-w.s with initial l- which occur only in Uyğ. texts have not been included below since they never became fully naturalized in Turkish.

PUF liyü: Hap. leg.; in the same para. as leţu; between kaţı and ü:lı; the first vowel ought therefore to be long, and the word may be corrupt, but it may represent some Chinese l.-w. like lîo or lîu. Xak. ix liyü: 'mud' (al-ţın) which turns into hard clay (salşîl) when it dries Kaş. III 238.
No native Turkish word except a few onomatopoecies, particles, etc., originally began with me- but in most Turkish languages initial b-, when followed by a nasal within the body of the word (but not in Suff.s.), is changed to m- by assimilation. In a few languages, like Xwar. xiii(?), this change has taken place even when there is no nasal in the word. Words with initial m-, of which the original form has not survived, are listed here as main entries; the remainder are entered here only w. cross-references.

Mon. MA

1 ma/1 me: perhaps an abbreviation of yeıme; an Enclitic with several functions. (1) in some cases it is best translated ‘and’ or ‘too’, and indeed has been treated by some authorities as an independent word, although there is no real doubt that it is an enclitic. (2) in others it hardly seems to do more than give some emphasis to the preceding word. (3) attached to the Interrogatives, klm., ne, etc. it turns them into indefinite relatives, e.g. nce Je ‘how much’; neçeme ‘however much’ 174; a.o.o. Tef. neçeme 220: Xwar. xiii(? ) become the chief of the begs here) me ‘and’ (let your name for ever be Karluk) Oğ. 246: xiv tım me kın ‘night and day’; ma/me Enclitic ‘also’ Qutb 109.

2 ma/2 me: an Exclamation, ‘here you are!’; take this!’ and the like; s.i.a.m.l.g. sometimes as ma, sometimes me. Xak. ili the word is entered twice, once as mim alif hâ, sometimes abbreviated to mim hâ, and once as mim alif; both might represent me: but ma: is more probable, at any rate for the first; ma(h) an Exclamation (hâr) meaning hünkâ va xud ‘here you are; take it’; one says this when handing something over (‘inda munâwalat(l)-ys’)... to save time one sometimes says ma(h) Kaş. III 118; ma: (or me?:) an Exclamation meaning ‘take it’; hence one says ma: xud va hâka ‘take it, here you are’; it is said both with hâ and with alif ma(h); examples of alternative spellings with initial hâ and alif in Ar. follow III 213.

VU 3 me: onomatopoecie for bleating; survives in SW Osm. me, Red. 2039, which rather than ma is presumably the sound intended. The Den. V. ‘to bleat’ is first noted as VU mele- in Kip. xiv, Id. 88, and exists as mere- in SE Türkî and mele- in SW Az., Osm., Tkm. F nöm: the Greek word nomos properly 'law' was a L.-w. in Syriac and was adopted by the Manichaens as a technical term with a rather wider meaning 'law, doctrine', etc.; from this it passed to Sogdian as nöm and was used in Buddhist texts to translate Sanskrit dharma, which has an even wider range of meanings. In Turkish it is used in both Man. and Bud. texts with a similarly wide range of meanings. It is not connected with Tokharian A höm mentioned in TT X 58 note; this is a pure Tokharian word meaning (and cognate to the English word) 'name'. Initial r-, like initial l-, q.v., was a sound entirely foreign to the Turkish language and any 1.-w. with initial r- which became established in the early language assumed a prosthetic vowel, e.g. SW Osm. uruc 'fasting, a canonical fast', a corruption of Pe. rūza. The only word with initial r- in Kaş is that listed below.

VU 1 sö: 'army'. The theory put forward in TT X, p. 19, note 206 that this should be transcribed sö: and taken as a L.-w. fr. Chinese shou 'to hunt' (Giles 10,013) is quite untenable since the spelling with s- is universal in texts in Ar. script. The word itself cannot be traced later than about xv, but the phr. sö: baṣi: 'army commander' lived on and, when sö: itself had been forgotten, was taken to be sö: baṣi: and used for 'water (i.e. irrigation) superintendent', an official of great importance in the Middle East, see e.g. SW Osm. sö baṣi Sami 835, Red. 1188. This misunderstanding suggests that the vowel was -ū but this is not certain. sapid, sap-: Preliminary note. There is great confusion about V.s of these two forms. The only certain form in Türkii is sap- 'to repair (something broken)', and the only certain form in Uyg. sap- 'to instil, graft', and the like, although 'to equip, fit out' was almost certainly sap-. Kaš. lists only sap- and translates it (1) 'to thread (a needle)'; (2) 'to repair (something broken)', but distinguishes between saptur- 'to order to repair' and septur- 'to order to provide a dowry', obviously a Causs. f. of sep- which is homophonous w. sep 'a dowry'. On this basis therefore it looks as if the Türkii word was misspelt and Kaš.'s two meanings go back to some common origin. Sap- 'to thread (a needle), to inoculate, graft' survives in SE Türkii: perhaps NW Kax. R IV 401: and SW Tkm.; sep- 'to equip' is not noted again. In the medieval period two apparently new V.s appeared, sap- 'to go astray, deviate', and the like, which is noted in xix NC Kaxx. and NW Kax. in R IV 402 and survives in SW Osm., and sep- 'to scatter (solid matter, e.g. seed), to sow; to sprinkle (liquids)', to irrigate', which is practically syn. w. saça- and s.i.o.m.i.g. (in SW serp-).

D savrât- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of savra:-; the Infm. is given as -mek, but this is no doubt an error; the second half of the entry was inadvertently omitted in the MS, and inserted later; the error may be due to the fact that the entry immediately followed süvrit-, and so it was in any case misplaced. Xak. xi ol evîn savrattû: farrâqâ bagyathan minâl-qumâs tool-

F sitr l.-w. fr. Sogdian st'yr, which is itself a l.-w. fr. Greek stater 'a silver coin'. Common in Usp. and Fam. Arch. as a unit of currency, occasionally as a unit of weight. The Dat. sitrka gives the quality of the vowels. Study of the documents shows that there were three units of currency, the bakır 'copper' representing the Chinese ch'ien 'copper cash' (Giles 1,736) of which ten were equal to a sitr, the sitr, and the yastuk equal to fifty sitr. As units of weight the bakır was a Chinese 'mace' or one-tenth of an ounce, and the sitr the Chinese liang 'ounce' (Giles 7,010). These words are discussed in F. W. K. Mühler, 'Uigurische Glossen', p. 319, Festschrift für Friedrich Hirth, Berlin, 1920. L.-w. in Mong. as šılır 'refined gold, gold leaf' (Kow. 1508). Uyg. viii ff. Civ. sok-, suk- Preliminary note. Most modern NE, NC, SC, and NW languages distinguish between sok- 'to beat, crush, reduce to powder, forge (iron)', and the like with a Direct Object in the Acc., and suk- 'to insert, thrust (something into something else)', with some connotation of force; to invite to enter, admit', and the like, with a Direct Object in the Acc. and an Indirect one in the Dat. In SE Türkü Shaw, BS and Jarring all list sok- but only Shaw 125 suk-. In SW only sok- (Az. sox-) exists; almost all its meanings belong to suk-, but some like '(of a snake) to bite; to injure, calamitate' in Osm. seem to belong to sok-. D sağın- Preliminary note. The -k- of sakin- was voiced at an unusually early period, cf. sakinç. This may have been due to the fact that the first vowel was originally long, cf. the spellings of sakinç in TT VIII. Thus fr. X1 there were two Vs. sağın- In Kaş. I sağın- is listed correctly between süşın- and soğun-; 2 sağın- is listed immediately before sakin-, three other Vs intervening between the two. Kaş.'s note shows that he was aware of the unusual status of 2 sağın-.

D 1 sağın- Ref. f. of sağ-; survives only(2) in SW Osm. sağın- 'to yield milk, or, metaphor, moisture' RV 265 (but few other authorities); Tkm. sağın- 'to milk for oneself'. Xak. xi er koyun sağindı 'the man pretended to milk his sheep' Kaş. II 152 (sağınur, sağınmak).

D 2 sağın- See sağın-.

D sakin- (sa:kn-) Ref. f. of sakin-; originally simply 'to think'; this meaning s.i.s.m.l., but in most it has come to mean 'to think longingly about (something); to desire', or 'to think anxiously about something, to be worried', and the like. In SW Osm. sakın- means 'to take care of oneself, to be cautious, to keep one's guard up' (and (Trans.) 'to protect'. These are meanings appropriate to sakla-, saklan- and seem to be due to a folk etymology; in Tkm. săğın- (sic) means 'to stop and think'. VUD soğan- (soğın)/suğın- Hap. leg.; in its first meaning Refl. f. of soğan-; the meaning of the Ar. translation of the second phr. is disputed, but a Rel. f. of suq- in the sense of 'to drain oneself off' would suit it. Xak. xi er sogundu: 'the man became cold' (tabarrada); and one says er sogundu: istafabl-racal minal-r-bal 'the man relieved himself of his urine' (etc.) Kaş. II 152 (soğunur, soğunmak).

VUD sokun- this V. is vocalized both skın- and sokun- in Kaş, but the Uyğ. phr. points clearly to the latter; in the absence of an Indirect Obj. it can be taken as sakun-rather than sukun- with the basic meaning of 'to rub oneself hard' or the like, but this is not wholly satisfactory. SW Osm. xv to xvii sakun- 'to put (an ornament) on (one's head); to plant (e.g. rose trees) in (the ground)' represents an earlier *sukun-. Uyğ. viii ff. I sağar 'a game batture'; n.o.a.b. Several Kip. authorities use this spelling for sağırlar, but that is a mere error. Not connected with sağar 'deal', a word of unknown origin first noted in xiv Muh. D saliğ Dev. N. fr. sal- (this, rather than salik, was prob. the original form) with a wide potential range of meanings. In the early period it meant some form of tax, and was the common word for 'tax' in the Golden Horde, see Cakeroğlu in T M IV, p. 41. It survives in this sense as sêlik in SE Tar. R IV 359; Türkî BS 386. Uyg. VIII ff. Survives for 'left-handed' in SW Osm., but all other languages seem to use some form of the Mong. word in this sense. The Kip. x1 meaning, not recorded elsewhere, seems to mean literally 'the organ on the left'; Kip. x1 sola the spleen (al-falal); the s- is altered from t- (i.e. in talâq, q.v.); this is like the (Ar.) word sitt for sid and tass for tass (another example quoted) Kip. S suluk See sulluk.

D salik occurs in two quite different meanings (1) 'cold; hoar-frost', and the like, and rather later (2) 'something pendulous, a bunch of grapes, ear-rings', and the like. In the first sense it is syn. w. sarkin, q.v., which is prima facie a N.A. fr. sark-; but sark- means 'to hang limply' and the like, so is semantically the basis of salkim in its second sense. On the other hand this is also one meaning of salun-, q.v. The explanation is perhaps that salk-, a der. f. in -k- (Intrans.) of sal-, also meant 'to hang limply' and is the basis of salkim in its second sense, and that sark- and salkim are Sec. f.s of these words. But the connection between sal- and its derivatives and 'cold' is obscure. Salkim in the sense of 'a bunch of grapes', and the like, survives in NW Kk. solkim: SW Az. salxim; Osm., Tkm. salkim; it does not survive in the sense of 'cold', but the cognate form salkim s.i.a.m.l.g., in NE Alt., 'rel. 'to a violent (cold) wind', elsewhere for 'cool', or 'cold' (weather). Uyg. VIII ff. Civ. D san Preliminary note. There is only one genuine Turkish word san, Dev. N. in -n (usually Intrans./Pass.) fr. sa-—basically 'number, estimate, calculation', which later acquired such meanings as 'a military parade' (i.e. 'a count of the troops') and '(personal) esteem, reputation', the latter following the development of meaning of say- (sa-:) to mean 'to respect (someone)'). With one or two such meanings, esp. 'military parade', it became a l.-w. in Pe. It s.i.a.m.l.g. A Pe. word sân meaning 'manner, resemblance', and the like used in such phr. as badin sân 'in this manner', and as a Suff. in words like pilsân 'like an elephant' entered Turkish as early as KB and s.i.s.m.l. as a l.-w. San 'sân 'in small pieces' noted in Çağ. and s.i.s.m.l. is merely a quasi-onomatopoetic not in the early period.

san Preliminary note. There is one meaning in which san is not demonstrably a l.-w., though even there it might be. Otherwise in Uyğ. san represents Chinese l.-w.s: (1) in U II 86, 4t (sanlig) it is a Sec. f. of tsağ, q.v.; (2) in H II 30, 144 it is the name of an unidentified drug; (3) in the formula narno saŋ 'homage to the community' it represents tšeng 'the Chinese transcription of Sanskrit saṅgha.'

saŋ Hap. leg.; but see saŋla-:, saŋplit-. Xak. xi saŋ wasli-fl%-âşyîr 'bird's dung'; hence one says kûs saŋ: dawli-fl%-âşîr (this also means 'bird's dung,' but is generally used in Ar. for 'mistletoe, Loranthus' and may have this meaning here) Kaş. III 357.

sen the 2nd Pers. Sing. Pron. 'thou'. The vocalization follows the same irregular pattern as ben, q.v., the Dat. having always been saŋa: In other cases the vowel was almost certainly -e-; spellings w. -ê- are fairly common in some dialects, but it seems impossible to find any grammatical explanation of the difference. In Türkî sen was used both as Sing. and as Plur., the regular Plur. siz not being found in these texts, perhaps fortuitously, but in Xak., q.v., it was regarded as uncivil to address anyone except an inferior as sen. C.i.a.p.a.l. Türkî viii sen occurs several times attached to V.s, e.g. ölteç: sen 'you will die' I S 8, II E 6; sen: Tavgaç qa不已urtec: 'they will kill you Chinese' T 10 (the only example of -ê-); ben sepe: (so spelt, perhaps in error) ne: ayayin 'what shall I say to you?' sun Preliminary note. Kaş.'s theory that the second word is merely a special meaning of the first is not plausible and the two have been listed separately. See suna:--

1 sun originally 'the human body', hence 'stature, height, external appearance', and the like. Survives in the latter meanings in NE: SE: NC Kâr. NW Kâ, Kaž. Nox. and in some of them for 'stature', esp. one on a grave. Cf. 1 bod. Türikî viii ff. Man. M III 16, 1 (i) (kedir): do. 18, 13 (ii) (közûn): Uyg. viii ff. III 138 (and see 2 sun): KB bod sun 1849 (2 kur), 2663: xin(?) Tef. sunn sûüjüm 'my body and bones' 271.

2 sun 'tomb'; survives only (?) in SW Osm. sun (sic); v. G. in TT VI, p. 89 suggested that this might be a l-w. fr. Chinese trin (ch'in, Giles 2,091) 'the rear hall in an ancestral temple', but this is impossible since in Middle Chinese this word had a final -m, not -n. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. sun onomatopoeic for a humming or buzzing noise; n.o.a.h. Cf. sipek, sül mê-. In some Uyg. Bud. texts sun is a mistranscription of şeq, q.v. Xak. xi one says kula:ki:smi siq etti: 'my eye buzzed' (tanna); and kömîzce; (MS. kömîzce) sun etti: 'the gnat buzzed' (naqqâ), also used of a fly buzzing Kaş. III 358: (xiv Muh.(?) al-anîn 'to goan' sunatmak (un-vocalized) might represent sun et- or at- Rif. 125 (only)).

VU sun Hap. leg. Xak. xi a good-natured, kind-hearted (al-lâyûnu'l-cânhî'î'l-salîmu'l-qâb) man is called sun ki:Kaş. III 138.

F sun the Chinese word ts'un 'a (Chinese) inch' (Giles 11,695) one-tenth of a Chinese foot (see 2 qîq), noted as tsun, q.v., in Uyg. Bud. is also spelt sun in the passages below. Kaş.'s exact meaning is uncertain; al-suflaca means 'a bill of exchange, cheque', and the like. The reference is perhaps to Chinese paper currency; these notes varied a good deal in size; it can hardly be to physical gold. Uyg. viii ff. Civ. II 1 146 (oturas): Xak. xi sun altun 'a currency note expressed in gold' (al-suflaca mina'l-qahab): it is something exceeding an inch and up to a cubit in length (mâ zâda 'alâ 'ül'l-işba itâl-l-dirâ) Kaş. VUF sunzî: Hap. leg.; ‘louse’. No doubt a l.w. fr. a Chinese phr. ’The second syllable is the common enclitic tсу (Giles 12,317), but there are difficulties about the first. The normal Chinese word for ‘louse’ is shihşē (Giles 9,929); there is an alternative word, Giles 9,930, Karlgen, Grammata Serica Recensio, no. 566a., which has the same pronunciation, but has as its upper part a character, Karlgen, op. cit., no. 383a., which serves as a phonetic sin/sin (both current) in Giles 4,584-6/4,894-6. Prof. W. Simon says that there is no evidence that it ever had this phonetic value in Giles 9,930, but as its presence in that character is unexplained (see Karlgen, op. cit.) it seems possible that there was once a Chinese word sin, or the like, for ‘louse’ which was later displaced by shihşē, a commoner word. Xak. xi sunzî: say’min cinîsîl-barüşt wa xishibûlu-l-gaml a thing of the fleas family; I reckon that it is ‘louse’ Kaş. I 422.

sa:r-, ser- Preliminary note. A good deal of confusion has occurred between these two V s. chiefly owing to scribal errors in the MS. of Kṣa. and misunderstandings by Atalay, but the difference is made clear by a grammatical passage, II 37 ff., on the formation of the Infin., if it is correctly translated. It states that there are two Infin. Suff., -mak and -mek, the first attached to V s containing (1) qāf; (2) gāyn; or (3) back vowels, the second to V s containing (1) al-kāf(u)-ṣu(ba); (2) al-kāf(u)-rakika (g); or (3) front vowels (al-kalimatu̇l-rakika). Examples are given of each class, that for the last including the following: e.g. er telim serdi: 'the man endured (sabara much), serer, sermek; since the word has front vowels, the Infin. has -mek (kāfīna); do you not see that a similar V. w. back vowels (al-muṣbi'a) has an Infin. in -mak (al-qaft), it is in the sentence bèg an: sard: 'the beg reproved him' (zacarahe), sarar, sarmak (MS. sermek). S sarâ: 'towards, in the direction of', and the like first appears in the medieval period, and s.i.s.m.l. It has been suggested that it is the Sogdian Postposition s'r, but this would have appeared earlier in Turkish or not at all, and there is little doubt that it is merely a crisis of şuári. Tris. V. SRG-

D sergekle-: Hap. leg.; Den. V. fr. sergek; 'to sway, totter'. Xak. xi Kaž. I 289 (sergek); n.m.e.

D 2 sirkele-: Hap. leg.; Den. V. fr. 2 sirke:. Xak. xi ol oglan basûn sirkele:ldi: he pulled the nits (naza‘ al-l‘-zi bân) from the boy’s head’ Kaž. III 353 (sirkele-: follows).

VUD sürgüle-: Hap. leg.; the vocalization is uncertain; the word is in a section for Tris. V.s ending in -le-: of which the second vowel is long; the Perf. is spelt sürgüle:di:, the Aor. and Infin. sürgüle:-; it is fairly obvious that the first is right on the length and the second on the quality of the vowel and that it is a Den. V. fr. *sürgü; Dev. N. fr. sür- meaning 'driving, pursuing', and the like. Xak. xi it keyiknl: sürgüle:ldi: 'the dog made the antelope run (a‘dâ ... -l-zaby) and followed in its tracks to catch it'; also used of anyone who ran after something and attacked it in order to catch it Kaž. III 353 (sürgüle:, sürgülemek).

D sirkele:-: Hap. leg.; Refl. f. of 2 sirkele:-; in a section containing V.s of which the second vowel should be long, but not so spelt in the MS. Xak. xi ol gzman sirkele:ldi: 'the boy's head (etc.) had nits' (g‘iibû) Kaž. III 202 (sirkele:, sirkelemek).

D siril-: Hap. leg.; Refl. f. of 2 sirkele:-; 'lacquered'. S.i.s.m.l. with some phonetic changes with the same shades of meaning as 1 sir. Xak. xi Kaž. I 324 (1 sir).

D saril-: Pass. f. of 1 sar:-; n.o.a.b.; the translation in Kaž., which would be appropriate for 1 sar:- and has no Pass. connotation, is inexplicable, but the word is used as an ordinary Pass. in KB; arildn is a mere jingle, see 2 aril-. Xak. xi be aqar arild: sarild: 'the beg (etc.) was angry with him'. Kaž. II 123 (sarilur, sarilme:K): KB (if a servant does something which does not please his master) ilenc özke kölû sarîsaa (Arat, serîle) kali 'he must blame himself, if he is abused (or ill-treated)' 1610; (a man's mind is like brittle glass, take great care of it, or it will break, sarma ani 'do not handle it roughly') sarîsa kişi köpî keltil tatiq 'if a man’s mind is roughly handled, the savour (of life) has gone' 4611.

D sarul-: Pass. f. of saru:- this V. seems to occur in two consecutive paras. in Kaž.; in the first the Perf. is spelt saruldu:, but the Aor. and Infin. are spelt saril-; in the second the Perf. is spelt siruldu: but the Infin. is spelt sarul-; the basic meaning is 'to be wrapped round (something)' There is, however, one difficulty about this explanation; in Uyğ. Man. a V. meaning 'to be attached to (something)' is clearly spelt siril-; this might be a Pass. f. of siril:- as a metaphor, application of 'to be sown firmly to (something)', but there is no other trace of such a V.; siril- in some medieval and modern languages is a Sec. f. of sûril-, q.v. Sarul- survives as saril- in NW Kaž.; SW Az., Osm. and saril- in Tkm. (Uyğ. viii ff. Man. sirilimlîl’skaa TT III 52 (II-)): Xak. xi yazgî yiga:ka; saruldu: 'the rope was wrapped round (iltaffa) the tree'; also used of other things (sarulur, sarulmek; MS. saril-); and one says yazgî elikke: saruldu: (MS, sirild:): 'the oil stuck to (iltaşaqa) the hand'; also used when parts of something have stuck to something else, e.g. flour to feel (sarluur (sic), sarulmak) Kaž. II 123; vii (i) Tef. (a fairy (peri) comes and) er bêline sarulur 'embraces the man’s waist’ 262; Osm. XVII ikinci hishara sarulup ‘investing the second fortress’ TTS IV 664.

D seril- except perhaps in Uyğ. can hardly be a Pass. f. of 1 ser- (which is normally Intrans.) and presents some problems. In Kaž. it is clearly cognate to sergek and the Pass. f. of 2 *ser-. This V., w. the connotation of 'to be fickle', may be that in PP 78, 5-6 (see armak) but the right reading there might be sarilur. In SW Az., Osm., Tkm. seril- is the Pass. f. of ser- with its meaning in those languages, and means 'to be spread out' (e.g. to dry). Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. (when I enter nirvîn, my doctrinal teaching called 'good' without being extinguished or diminished ...) yerîncîde serîlip turur 'will endure (or remain?) on earth' Sut. 164, 16-17 (cf. Civ.); Sanskrit missing serîlî TT VIII F.10; a.o. PP 78, 5-6 (armac); Civ. in TT VII 1, an astronomical text, the word used for a planet ‘remaining’ in a particular constellation is serer (see ser-), but in L. 46 it is serîlur: Xak. xi er serîldi: (translated) tamâyaal/- -sahran ‘the drunken man swayed’, and almost fell down; also used of anything else that sways and almost falls down Kaž. II 123 (serîlûr, serîlîmek); a.o. I 196 (erîl): KB (when I was angry with you, you yourself blamed me) serîldim saqa men tüğiîlî yûzîn ‘I relented (lit. swayed) towards you, and yourowned at me’ 795.

D siril-: See sarul-.

D sorul- (sorul-) Pass. f. of 2 sor:-; ‘to be inquired about, questioned’, and the like. Survives in SW Osm. sorul-, Tkm. sorul-. In other modern languages sorul- is the Pass. f. of 1 sor:- ’to be sucked’ and the like, noted in the early period. Uyğ. viii ff. Man. A M I 26, 27-8 (I a’t): (Xak.) xii(i) At. sorul- ‘to be questioned’ Çaq. xv ff. sorul- (spelt pursida şu‘dan ‘to be asked, questioned’) and makida şu‘dan ‘to be sucked’) San. 240V. 10.
D sürül- Pass. f. of sür-; s.i.s.m.l. with the same range of meanings as sür-. Xak. xi at sürülüld: `the horse was driven' (siqä); and one says er sürülüld: `the man (etc.) was driven away' (or repulsed, türdida); and one says mônçuk sürülüld: `the beast was rubbed' (or polished, suhiga); also used when a thing rubs itself (insahaqa bi-nafisih); Intrans. and Pass. Kaş. II 123 (sürünlür, sürülmek; for the last meaning cf. sürültü-: xiiii?) Tef. sürülül: `to be driven away' 279: Çağ. xv ff. sürülül (-wu-) `to be driven away'; metaphor. `to be ploughed' San. 240v. 10.

D sarla- Hap. leg., but see der. f.s.; Den. V. fr. *sar, cognate to saru-, which might be a Den. V. in -u- fr. *sar. Xak. xi ol suvluk sarlad: `he wound (kara) a turban round his head'; and one says șol adakin: yırğençü sarlad: `he wrapped (laffa) a bandage round his leg'; also used of anything wrapped round something Kaş. DF sirla- Dev. N. fr. sır; s.i.s.m.l., but usually for `to colour, glaze', and the like. Xak. xi ayakçı ayak sirlad: `the cup-maker (al-qasṣā) smears viscous paste (i.e. lacquer; lataxa luziçeti-l-gira) on the cup to ornament it' (li-yunaqqişalā) Kaş. III 296 (sirlar, sirlamak).

D sarlat- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of sarla-: Xak. xi ol suvluk sirlatt: `he ordered that the turban should be wound round' (bi-takvir); also of anything else Kaş. II 346 (sirlatur, sirlatmak).

DF sirlat- Caus. f. of sirla-; s.i.s.m.l. Xak. xi ol ayak sirlatt: `he ordered that viscous paste (i.e. lacquer) should be smeared on the Turkish (sic) cup' Kaş. II 346 (sirlatur, sirlatmak).

D sarlan- Reff. f. of sarla-; n.o.a.b. Xak. xi er suvluk sarlanlıd: `the man put on a turban' (ta'amamana); and one says er yırğençü sarlanlıd: `the man wrapped himself (talaffafal) in a bandage'; and one says yıp yığınçuka sarlanlıd: `the cord was wrapped (tülafal) round the tree'; it is both Active (Reff.) and Pass.; and one says er teşka sarlanlıd: șta'da'da'l-rasul릴-l-anma the man made himself ready for work' Kaş. II 246 (sarlamura, sar闫jmak; the last sentence with unvocalized V. follows the Infinit. but clearly belongs to the same para.): Osm. xv and xvi sarlan- `to be wrapped in (something Dat.)' in several texts TTS II 795; III 600; IV 664.

DF sirlan- Reff. f. of sirla-; s.i.s.m.l. Xak. xi ayak sirlanlıd: `the cup was smeared with viscous paste (i.e. lacquer) in order that it might be ornamented' (li-yuqnaq `alayhi) Kaş. II 246 (sirlanur, sirlanmak).

D sarlas- Hap. leg.; Reff. f. of sarla-: Xak. xi șol maşa suvluk sarlasdı: `he helped me to wind (fi takvir) a turban (round my head)'; also for (helping to) wrap (fi laff) something, and for competing Kaş. II 215 (sarlaşur, sarlaşmak).

D serim N.S.A. fr. ser-; in its most obvious meaning `patience', der. fr. ser-as an Intrans., attested only by its P.N./A. and Priv. N./A.; in the meaning `strainer', noted only in Kaş., it looks at first sight like a scribal error for *sizim, the obvious word to give such a meaning, but its existence is proved by its Den. V. serme-, q.v., and der. f.s of that V.; in this sense it must be der. fr. ser- in its rarer, Trans., meaning `to endure', hence `to hold back'. Xak. xi serim kula mâya yuwafta bihiš-i-ibrasac minaš i-ibrasac yah veli biyuwafta bihiš-i-sarab` any piece of silk or the like used to cover a mug or mug in order to strain a beverage' Kaş. I 397.

S sirım See şurim.

D sorma- Pass. Dev. N. fr. i sor-; lit. `something sucked in', in practice `wine, beer'. Survives only(?) in SE Salar (see Ligeti, op. cit. below). Cf. borç, çahr, suçça. Uyğ. viii ff. Civ. (you should make a powder of various substances and) tağda sayu bor sorma birle içürser `give it (to the patient) to drink every morning with a draught of wine' (Hend.? I I 164: XIX Chın.-Uyğ. D sûrme- Pass. Dev. N. fr. sür-; lit. `something driven, pushed', etc.; not noted before the medieval period, but s.i.n.m.l.g.; the commonest modern meaning is `antimony, collyrium', presumably originally `something rubbed (on the eyebrows)'. In this sense it became a L.-w. in Russian as surma and has been re borrowed, with back vowels, in some languages. It also means `a sliding door-bolt; a sliding drawer' in some languages. Xwar. xiii sürme `antimony' Alt. 55: xiv ditto Quth 163: Kip. xiii (under `women's gear') al-kuhl `collyrium' sürme: Hou. 18. 5: xiv sürme: al-išm ditto Id. 52: xiv šahrul-breccār `a carpenter's plane' sürme Tuh. 28a. 3: hulh sürme do. 31a. 10: Osm. xiv and xvi sürme `collyrium' in two texts TTS I 657; IV 718.

F şâd Iranian l.-w. in a form not found in any known dialect, but cognate to Saka tao, Sogdian ńao, Pe. sâb, ultimately der. fr. Old Pe. xdiabya. In Turkish the title, ranking prob. next after xoğan and bestowed by the xoğan on some close relative, younger brother or son, often carried with it the duty of ruling part of the xoğan's dominions, so that 'viceroy' is perhaps the nearest English equivalent, but not an exact translation. In Turkish, apart fr. one occurrence in Uyg. and a very dubious one in O. Kr., Mal. 2, 1, pec. to Türkî, but various 'Turkish şâds' are mentioned in the Chinese records, the word being transcribed sha, shê, or ch'a, see Chavannes, Documents sur les Tous-kiues (Turcs) occidentaux. Preliminary note. It can be shown by the study of Turkish loan-words in certain languages and some other evidence (see Studies, p. 124, etc.) that some words which began with ۊ in TİI had earlier begun with ۊ- or Ƌ-; where such evidence is available the original initial is added in brackets after the word. Words with initial ʏ- have undergone exceptionally large phonetic changes in modern times; in most NE languages the ʏ- has become ɕ-, ɛ-, or some cognate sound, in NC, some NW languages, and SW Tkm. ɕ- or ɬ-, while in other languages, esp. SW Az., Osrn., the ʏ- has been elided, esp. fr. words beginning w. ʏ-ʃ-1. On the other hand in Xak. and one or two other languages a prosthetic ʏ- was added to some words beginning w. vowels, esp. ʃ-1. There is, however, seldom any difficulty in determining the original forms of such words.

PUF yabğu: a title of great antiquity, certainly going back to the Yüeh-chhi, that is before the Christian Era, which has frequently been discussed by historians of Central Asia (for some refecs. see Çaf., p. 226). In the Türkü period it was, like şaq, q.v., a title conferred by the xağan on close relatives and normally carried with it the duty of administering part of the xağan's dominions. Although the yabğu is sometimes mentioned before the şaq he prob. ranked below rather than above him. After the Türkü period the title seems to have lost some importance and Kaş. describes it as two ranks below the xağan, that is below the yuğrüss 'vizier', q.v.; by this time the title şaq had disappeared. The word is spelt yavuğ in Xak.; the pronunciation in Türkü is uncertain owing to the ambiguity of the Runic alphabet, but as it is spelt laqgu in the Hethalite version of the Greek alphabet on a coin attributed by Ghirshman to a Western Türkü ruler of the mid-seventh Century (see H. Ghirshman, Les Chûntes-Hethitaltes, Cairo, Institut français d'Archéologie orientale, 1948, p. 50) it was prob. yabğu: It survived as the title of the supreme ruler of the Öğüz of the Aral Sea area until the tenth century, but most references to it are in non-Turkish (Chinese, Ar., Pe., etc.) texts. The Turkish refecs. are assembled below. Yuvuğ, yuvka: Preliminary note. Kaş. distinguishes between these two words, placing the first under the cross-heading C and the second under the cross-heading K, but in other passages the second is spelt yuvğa:

yuvğa: n.o.a.b.; al-da‘i means both ‘bastard’ and ‘adopted son’; but the meanings of yuvğad-, yuvğalan- suggest that the first is intended here. Xak. xi yuvğa: (MS. yuvğa:) al-da‘i Kaş. III 32: KB hayusa baş eğmez boğun yuvğası ‘base-born people, when they grow rich, cease to be respectable’ 5523.

D yapak: (d-) morphologically obscure (-ku: is not a recognized Suff.) but obviously connected w. yap- and 2 yap, w. which it is more or less syn., and perhaps a Dev. N. fr. *yapak:– a Den. V. fr. the latter. It seems originally to have meant ‘matted hair, or wool’ (cf. yapğut) and hence ‘an animal whose hair has grown long and matted’ and, more specifically, ‘a colt’, and ‘a man whose hair is long and matted’, hence perhaps its use as a tribal name. It became a First Period l.-w. in Mong. as da‘aga(r) ‘two-year-old colt’ (Haenisch 30; dağa in Kay. 1570, Haldet 445); the connection w. Mong. daqagi ‘a tangle or mass of hair’ (Haldet 445; w. Den. V. listed there and in Kay. 1581) is obscure. It survives as yapğl in SW Az. ‘the spring shearing of hair or wool’; Osm. (also yapak) ‘wool in the fleece’; and as yapğl in SW Tkm.; yabaga/yabagı/cabagı/jabagı, etc. in most NE, NC, NW languages, for ‘colt’, the ages (from ‘newly born’ to ‘two-year-old’) varying fr. language to language, see Shekerbak, p. 92. Xak. xı Yapak: ‘a tribe (el) of the Turiks’; yapak: ‘a thick mass (al-qarda) of wool or hair on the head’; (angel) when it has become matted (ilfrabada) one says yapak: boldu; Yapak: suvi: the name of a river which flows to ('alā) Özcend and Fārgāna from the mountains of Kağar Kaş, III 38 (the Yapa:ku: bith (transcribed 'Yabakû:'); tribe, and words in its dialect, are mentioned elsewhere in Kaş: Çağ: xv ff. yapağ:yaşak ('with -p-') kura-i asb xir'-xırā 'an unweaned colt'. San. 335v. 22.

D yapaklı (7d-) P.N./A. fr. yapg; s.i.s.m.l. in various forms and meanings. Xak. x. yapğ:kapg 'a bolted (muğlako) door' Kaş, III 49; Kom. xiv 'fitted with a cover' yabovli CCG; Gr.

D yapakulak in Kaş. this word in both meanings is described as peculiar to the Yapa:ku: and Yeme:k dialects, which makes it fairly certain that it is a Dev. N./A. fr. a Den. V. fr. Yapa:ku: as a tribal name, meaning lit. (a disease or bird) 'peculiar to the Yapa:ku: country'. This would explain why it has two quite different meanings, the first Hap. leg., the second not a generic term for 'owl', which is uğl:q, q.v., but the name of some particular kind of owl, not always the same. In the first entry the ya' carries a dama, but this is an obvious error since with this spelling it should have followed the second. Survives meaning 'owl', of no specified kind except where stated, in NE Bar. yapakulak R III 267; Koib. yabakulak do. 273; Tob. yabakulak 277: SE Tar., Türkiy yapağ:alak 'short-eared owl, Otus brachyotus' Shaw 215, etc.: NW Kk., Nog. yapağ:alak; Kaz., Krm., Kumy yapağ:alak 'great owl, Bubo maximus': SW Az. yapalag; Osm. yapağ:alak 'great owl'. Yapa:ku:; Yeme:k Xi yapakulak al-r:i'da mina'l-humma 'feverish shivering, ague': yapakulak al-hama mina'l-fayr 'owl' Kaş, III 56: Çağ. xv ff. yapalak ('with -p-') 'a yellow bird with large eyes'; the author of the Burhān-i Qāfi says that in P. it is called cağna, arabicized as cağnaq (same meaning) San. 335v. 25 (prob. 'great owl'): Kom. xiv 'screech-owl' yapağ:alak CCI; Gr. D yaprait- (yapraîd-) Hap. leg.; Den. V. in -d (Trans.) fr. yaprî, q.v.; 'to flatten'. Kas. made two mistakes in this entry; as in the case of kutad-, q.v., he failed to recognize that the Aor. and Infin. should be seen as yaprûqu, yaprûmâk; and he translated it 'to prick', whereas anyone familiar with horses knows that a horse that is going to kick does not prick its ears but flattens them backwards. 2 yat(-d) 'rain magic; rain stone'; the history of this word, which is extremely complicated, is discussed at length in Doerfer I, 157 (ca-dâmiş); as such it is n.o.a.b., but it became a Second Period 1.-w. in Mong. as cada (Haenisch 84) and found its way into Turkish in this form and as yada (see Çağ.); s.i.a.m.l. in one form or the other. It has at one time or another been connected with 'jade' and Pe. cädî 'magic,' but these are certainly errors. There is some evidence of the existence of a word in Sogdian, ƍ, which might mean 'rain stone' (see Doerfer, op. cit.), but there is no reason to suppose that this is a 1.-w. in Turkish, though the reverse might be the case. D yokla-: Preliminary note. Apart fr. the Den. V. fr. 2 yok listed below, there is clear evidence of the existence of a Den. V. fr. 1 yok at any rate in SW Tkh. yokla- 'to destroy, kill, expend (money)'. This Tkh. V. also means 'to remember, or commemorate', and there is a wide range of V.s fr. Çağ. onwards which have more or less similar meanings: NE Twu. çoulta- 'to notice the absence of (someone or something)'; Alt. yokto- 'to feel, examine' R III 407: SE Türki yokla/-yokla- 'to look after, to visit (a friend to ask after his health), to inquire, verify, check'; NC Kir. jokto-, Kzx. jokta- 'to investigate, check; to discover a loss'; SC Usb. yukla- 'to visit, inquire, investigate'; NW Kk. jokta- 'to discover the loss of something'; Neg. yokla- 'to visit': SW Az. yokla- 'to check, investigate, feel'; Osm. yokla- 'to feel, examine, search, try, test, visit'. While it would be just possible to regard these as Den. V.s fr. 1 yok in the sense of 'to note, or investigate, the absence of something', it is likely that some at any rate are extensions of the meaning of yokla- which developed when, with the adoption of Islam, the practice of holding funeral feasts was dropped and forgotten.

?('D yek 'demon, devil'; the old theory, which still has some support, is that this is a l.-w. fr. yakhâ, a Prakrit f. of Sanskrit yaksha 'demon'; so such as this is improbable, yakça itself occurs in TT VII 13, 55; 16, 17; but it might be a l.-w. fr. a Sogdian or Chinese transcription of the Sanskrit word. v.G. in TT VI, p. 61, note 131 put forward the more plausible theory that since yek often occurs in the Hend. yek içgek, in which içgek is a Dev. N./A. in -gek (connoting habitual action) fr. iç- meaning 'constantly drinking', i.e. 'vampire', yek is a Dev. N. in -ker (her theory that it is a crisis of yegesk is improbable) fr. yê- meaning 'constantly eating', i.e. 'glutton'. The only objections to this theory are (1) that a Dev. N./A. fr. yê- should be yêk (cf. 2 yégî), not yek; (2) that an actual l.-w. yek might well have been taken for such a Turkish Dev. N. and içgek devised to match it, in order to represent 'demons and vampires'. For 'demon' the word is now obsolete, displaced by Mong. l.-w. in the NE and Ar. words like qaytân, ibis elsewhere, but survivals as yek 'hateful, hostile' in NE Alt., Tel., çek in Şor, çek in Sak., dito, and çek 'glutton' in Sak., R III 316-17, 1945. Dis. YLG-
(D) Yalıt (d-) syn. w. yal and obviously cognate, but morphologically obscure, since
-yil is not a recognized Den. Suff. N.o.a.b.
Xak. XI yalıt 'urf-i-l-dik 'a cock's comb', hence one says takuk yalīt-; yalık
also 'a horse's mane' (urf); biğa fi yal, yel aṣabha minhinū Kaş. III 13 (the clear implication of the last sentence is that both yal and yel were used for 'mane', but that yalık was a more correct form than either): (Kom. XIV see yal:
Osm. XVI to XVIII see yal).

VU(D) 2 yalık 'saddle-bow'; pec. to Kaş.;
this word is listed after yuluk and yılık, and so should presumably have -ı as its first vowel; but, although generally unvocalized, it has a fatha on the yā in the first entry, and seems to be a metaphor, usage, of yalıq in the sense of something sticking up. It was therefore prob. an afterthought of the author inverted in the wrong place in our MS. Cf.

yalın- Preliminary note. Yalın- as the Refl. f. of 1 yal- may occur in KB and certainly survives in NE Al., Tel. yalın- (of lightning) 'to flash' RIII 167. Yalın- as the Refl. f. of 2 yal- is the only certainly old V., but is pec. to Xah. A third yalın- is first noted only in the medieval period; San. clearly linked it w. yalga- and translated it (of a dog) 'to lick its master', but this translation seems to be based on this false etymology. The basic meaning seems to be rather 'to plead' and the like. If so, it is more or less syn. w. yaivar- but cannot be linked morphologically. None of these V.s provides a suitable basis for yalguţ; q.v.

D 1 yalın- Refl. f. of 2 yal.; n.o.a.b. In Kbh 121 the meaning might be 'may the wicked man be stripped', but the translation suggested below, which is Arat's, is likelier. Xah. xı er yalın- 'the man (etc.) stripped himself' (ta'arrá) Kaş. III 85 (yalınur, yalınmak): KB tirilisini terken kutî mi胃肠 yalınsun körmeye karaki utun 'may the king's majesty live with a thousand favours of heaven; may the wicked man be dazzled so that his eyes cannot see' 121.

2 yalın- 'to plead' and the like; see above. Survives as yalın- 'to plead, implore', occasionally 'to flatter' in NE Al., Kür, Tel. R III 167: NC (yalın-): SC Üzb. (yalın-): NW Kk. D yelne- (yelne-) Den. V. fr. yelın-; pec. to Kaş. Xah. xı bý yelnedî: 'the mare's (etc.) udders swelled (? ašraqa) at the time of parturition', that is when milk became abundant (arsalat) in them Kaş. III 310 (yelnefr, yelnemek); a.o. 310, 18.

PU?D yalguţ- Xah. xı KB 5972 reads (he spent a sleepless night; the dawn broke; in the flower garden a nightingale) surûhid üldilik eşittâ and then three alternative readings (Fergana MS.) köpüll y.işüddi; (Cairo MS.) köpüll y.işüddi; (Vienna MS.) turup yış- ladî; after 'sang an unintelligible song, he heard it with delight', the Vienna text,'and stood up and wept' is obviously wrong. Of the other two texts the Cairo one seems preferable; the Fergana one is the same with -n- omitted. Arat took it to be a Den. V. fr. yalın translated it 'caught fire'; this is possible but not very plausible since the Sec. f. yalun is pec. to Osm. It therefore seems likely that it is a Den. V. fr. yalın and that the phr. means 'his mind became stripped (of care)'.

Xak. xi urağut yenidli: ‘the woman gave birth and laid down her burden’ (walaadat . . . wa waddat at hamahd; this V. is used specifically (xasata(h)) of women only; in the case of other animals the name of the offspring (al-İlhal) is taken and the Suffix. -İIa; is added to it to give the concept of parturition (al-İlhal), e.g. of a cow one says inşa: buzağnut: ‘the cow gave birth to a calf’, buzağnut with Suffix. -İIa; (other examples follow). There are two possible etymologies (tiştiyiq) of yenini-; one is that it is derived fr. the phr. yenik neq ‘a light (al-saff) thing’, and that she laid down her burden she became light (xaffat), yenidli: w. a hasra on the nın, but the regular form for this meaning would have a damma (i.e. yenidli); there is no good foundation for this statement.

The other is that it is derived fr. yel ‘a body’ (al-badan) and that the woman, when she gave birth, ejected (arxuçat) a body (casad) from herself. Both theories are plausible (hasan) Kas. III 91 (yelini (sic); yenimeq; bu: urağut ol yénigü; (sic, the MS. has yeliniğinü) ‘this woman is on the point of giving birth’ (arxuçat ‘al-lalat-Ilhal) III 36: KB bodun asçi artti yenip yuğeri ‘the people’s benefits increased, their burdens became lighter’ 1564.

VU(I)yöntüş-n.o.a.b.; the Suff.-tükün points to front vowels, the first syllable is spelt yon-, but this scripta defectiva is not unusual in Uyg. script after y-; as elsewhere in this text the -ş- is represented by -s-, but the V. is clearly a Recip. f. The meaning seems to be 'to quarrel' or the like, but no basic f. seems to be known. Uyg. 318 ff. ?C yerîntçî the 'world', and more specifically 'this world', as opposed to heaven, hell, etc.; in TT VIII spelt yérîntçîl/yérîntçî yérîntcî. It is suggested in the Indices to TT VIII and X, perhaps on the basis of the statement in Kow. 2368 that this word as a l.-w. in Mong. is the equivalent of Tibetan hjîg-rlen, that this is a Tibetan l.-w. This is open to several objections; (1) it assumes an eroded pronunciation of the Tibetan phr. which is improbable at this early date; (2) while hjîg-rlen, lit. 'receptacle of the permissible' is the standard Tibetan phr. for 'the external world', there is no trace in the ditches of an extended phr. containing the equivalent of -çû (-çî); (3) there are no known Tibetan l.-ws in early Turkish and no evidence that the Indian Buddhist terminology in Turkish was obtained through any intermediaries other than Sogdian, Tokharian and, later, Chinese. The word is much more likely to be a purely Turkish compound w. yér as the first component. As regards the second it is perhaps significant that in TT I 91 (damaged) there is an anathesis between yérde and tonçudâki, and it is possible that the second element is tançu: 'a lump of earth', q.v. yas (ʔn-) basically 'fresh, moist'; from this extended meanings developed: (1) 'fresh' to 'green vegetables'; (2) 'moist' to 'running with moisture; tears'; and perhaps also (3) 'fresh every year' to 'a year of one's life', but this might be a different word. There is no reasonable doubt that in the last sense it became an ya: y there is utter confusion in the Turkish languages about the words for 'spring' and 'summer'. Since yaz, q.v., must originally have meant 'summer', ya: must originally have meant 'spring', which is Kaş.'s translation in the main entry and is confirmed by its use in antithesis to kı:z 'autumn' in one passage. But yayla:-, q.v., always meant 'to spend the summer (somewhere)', and already in Kaş. yay is used for 'summer', in antithesis to kı:z 'winter', in some verses. In modern languages the position is even more confusing; yaz s.i.a.m.l., but ya:y has disappeared fr. some, and in others the meanings of the two words have become inverted.
