PREFACE

1. In the first two chapters of Turkish and Mongolian Studies, Royal Asiatic Society Prize Publication Fund, vol. XX, London, 1962 (hereafter referred to as Studies), I gave a brief sketch of the history of the Turkish peoples and of their languages from the earliest period (the eighth century A.D.) at which they become directly known to us down to the medieval period, and attempted to identify and name the various dialects and languages which evolved during that period.

2. The broad thesis of this sketch was that a unitary Turkish language, which was not genetically connected with any other language known to us, and specifically not connected genetically with the Mongolian and Tungus languages, took shape, almost certainly in the steppe country to the west and north of the Great Wall of China, at some date which we cannot now determine, but certainly long before the start of the Christian era; that this unitary language split into two main branches, 'standard Turkish' and 'I/r Turkish', not later than, and perhaps before, the beginning of the Christian era; and that during the first millennium A.D. standard Turkish slowly broke up into two or three dialects, which soon became independent languages. No substantial early texts of any form of I/r Turkish have survived, but there are in Chinese historical works a few words of Taṿg̣aq̣, the language of the Turkish tribe called by the Chinese T'o-pa, who were the ruling element in the Chinese Northern, or Yüan, Wei dynasty (A.D. 386–535), and there are some Turkish loan-words in Mongolian and Hungarian which were almost certainly borrowed from an I/r language, by the Mongols probably in the fifth or sixth centuries, and by the Hungarians probably in the ninth. The slight remains of Proto-Bulgar are in a similar language and so too are a few funerary inscriptions of the Volga Bulgars of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. The material is, however, very scanty and I have made only a few references herein to words in I/r Turkish, and those mainly where the only surviving I/r language, Chuvash (Çuv.), throws light on the phonetic structure of individual standard Turkish words. These citations are from N. I. Ashmarin, Thesaurus linguae Tschuvaschorum, 17 vols., Kazan–Cheboksary, 1928–50, cited as Ash. followed by the volume and page.

3. As I pointed out in Studies, p. 53, an essential basis for any scientific study of the comparative etymology of the Turkish languages is a list of all genuine Turkish words which are known to have existed before the various medieval Turkish languages were subjected to a mass invasion of loan-words from the languages of the foreign peoples (mainly Arabs, Iranians, and later Mongols) with whom the Turkish peoples then came into contact. The present work contains just such a list. I have endeavoured to include in it all the words known to have existed in the earliest known standard Turkish languages, that is Türkü, Uyghur, including Uyghur-A, Old Kirghiz, Xakani, Oguz, Kipchak, and some minor dialects, prior to the Mongolian invasion at the beginning of the thirteenth century, excluding, except in a few special cases, words borrowed directly or indirectly from the Indian, Iranian, and Semitic languages. All references to 'early Turkish' and 'the early period' relate to the Turkish languages as we know them in the eighth to twelfth centuries inclusive.

4. One of the special characteristics of the Turkish languages is the manner in which derived words are constructed from the basic words of the language by a process of attaching suffixes to them. It is important, therefore, not merely to compile a bare list of these early words and their meanings, but also to indicate what kind of words they are (nouns, verbs, adverbs, etc.), verbs being distinguished from the rest by the attachment of a hyphen, e.g. at (noun) 'a horse', at- (verb) 'to throw', and in addition, in the case of derived words, to analyse their structure and indicate from what basic words they were derived, since this often explains their semantic evolution. This is all the more important since, even at the earliest date at which it becomes known to us, Turkish had already had a long history, in the course of which some basic words had already become obsolete, leaving the words derived from them, so to speak, 'in the air', with no obvious origin; on this point see, for example, Studies, pp. 140 ff. In giving these morphological explanations I have used the grammatical terminology customary among English scholars of Turkish, eschewing the new terminologies which are now taking shape in some academic circles.

5. My second purpose has been to establish the original meanings of all words in the list and trace their subsequent semantic evolution by illustrating each word by a quotation, or series of quotations, of passages in early texts in which they occur. For this purpose I have examined all the surviving texts in the languages enumerated above to which I have been able to obtain access. These texts are enumerated in paras. 20-6 below.

6. The only words which have been included in the list without at least one such quotation are a few which can first be traced in an actual Turkish text only in the medieval period, that is during the thirteenth to sixteenth centuries inclusive, but which demonstrably existed at an earlier period for such reasons as that they exist both in standard Turkish and in Chuvash (in a distinctive form peculiar to that language) so that they must already have existed before the split between standard and Jfr Turkish, or that words derived from them are attested in the early period, or that they occur as loan-words in foreign languages in forms which indicate that they must have been borrowed in, or before, the early period. The texts which have survived from the early period are of course only a fraction of those which once existed and there are no doubt other words which existed in the early period but do not happen to occur in the texts which have survived. Some of these words occur in medieval texts or still exist in modern Turkish languages, but I have not attempted to identify and include them in the list, since the evidence that they were really early words is lacking.
7. A surprisingly large number of early words are hapax legomena (Hap. leg.), that is, occur only once, and have not so far been discovered elsewhere; they have, however, been included in the list because they seem to be genuine Turkish words and may later be discovered elsewhere; but the fact that they are Hap. leg. makes it impossible to determine whether they are correctly transcribed. Properly speaking the term implies one single occurrence, but it has been stretched to include verbs listed in Kap. with an enumeration of the Perf., Aor., and Infin. forms, since experience shows that if a word is mis-spelt in the Perf. it may also be mis-spelt in the Aor. and Infin.

8. When an early word has survived into the medieval period, I have also added a selection of quotations from the texts enumerated in paras. 27–52, and when it still survives in one or more modern languages I have usually recorded this fact also. There are two reasons for doing this: the first is that evidence of this kind is often required to fix the exact meaning and pronunciation of the word in the early period; the second is that, as I understand it, the main purpose of compiling a dictionary of this kind is not only to help students to read and understand the meaning of early texts, but also to provide a solid basis for the etymological dictionaries of medieval and modern Turkish languages which are now being compiled or will be compiled in future. I must, however, make it clear that my quotations from medieval texts and enumerations of modern languages in which a word survives do not profess to be as comprehensive as the quotations from early texts.

THE SYSTEM OF TRANSCRIPTION

9. The problems of transcribing early Turkish texts are discussed at length in Studies, Chap. 3 and elsewhere, and it is unnecessary to cover the whole ground again. There is, of course, no means of discovering exactly how Turkish was pronounced between 900 and 1200 years ago; the alphabets employed are all to a greater or less degree unscientific; the most that can be achieved is a broad system of transcription which will give an approximate idea of the pronunciation of the words concerned in the languages enumerated in para. 3. The transcription alphabet which I suggested in Studies and which is used here can best be described as the official alphabet of the Turkish Republic with one minor modification (regarding the use of ğ and ğ) and a few extra letters to represent sounds which either do not exist in Republican Turkish (Rep. Turkish) or, if they exist, are not represented by a distinctive letter. This alphabet was selected on the basis that the phonetic structure of early Turkish was probably much the same as that of Rep. Turkish, apart from certain sounds for which special letters have been provided. These sounds can be tabulated as follows:

10. Vowels. There are four back and five front vowels, all of which may be either short or long. The only additional letter is ĕ for close e, a sound which certainly existed in early Turkish and still survives at any rate in some dialects of Rep. Turkish.

Back: \(\text{short a i o u} \)
\(\text{long a: i: o: u:}\)

Front: \(\text{short e é i ö ü}\)
\(\text{long e: é: i: ö: ü:}\)

These are arranged, when circumstances demand it, in the following order: a, a:, e, e:, é, é:, i, i:, i:, o, o:, u, u:, ö, ö:, ü, ü:; note that u, u: precede ö, ö:. The round vowels represent a range of sounds which merge imperceptibly into one another in the various languages.

In most, but not all, modern languages the vowels ö and ü occur only in first syllables of words, but there is good evidence, which I assembled in ‘Three Notes on Early Turkish’, Türk Dili Araştırmaları Yıllığı, 1966, pp. 1 ff., that they were also used in the second and later syllables of many words in early Turkish. This evidence is, however, too fragmentary and imperfect, and in some cases too inconsistent, to justify restoring such spellings at the beginning of all the entries concerned. I have therefore entered all these words in the conventional spelling with u/ü in the second and later syllables. Where there is good evidence in regard to individual words that these vowels were originally o/ö I have entered these spellings in brackets, e.g. törü: (törö:), but I must emphasize that these sounds occurred in far more words than are singled out for this treatment, for example, in all words with the Suffix -uk/-ük (-ök/-ök).

11. Consonants. The conclusion reached in Studies was that the sounds which existed in early Turkish can be tabulated as follows, v. representing voiced and u. unvoiced sounds:

Liquids (v.) l r (Aspirate (u.) h)

The post-palatal sounds occur only in association with front vowels and the velar sounds only in association with back vowels, so only one letter, k, is required to represent both unvoiced plosives. The unvoiced labial fricative f probably did not exist in early Turkish as an independent sound, but seems to have arisen as a secondary form of v in association with some unvoiced sounds. The voiced palatal sibilant probably did not exist as an independent sound in early Turkish, but is noted as a secondary sound in one or two words containing ç, e.g. çöj- probably for çöz-. It also occurred in a few Sogdian loan-words, e.g. aːjuːn, and a few other words, e.g. üjme; which are probably, but not demonstrably, Sogdian loan-words. The labial semi-vowel w was not a native Turkish sound, but evolved as a secondary form of v in one or two languages like early Oğuz and also occurred in some loan-words. The voiced post-palatal ğ was normally a plosive, but may in certain positions have been a fricative; conversely the voiced velar ğ was normally a fricative but may in certain positions have been a plosive. The unvoiced velar fricative x probably did not exist as an independent sound in early Turkish, but seems to have arisen as a secondary form of k in association with some sounds, and also occurred in a few loan-words, some of them very old like xağan and xan. Kâşgâri says that the simple aspirate h was not a native Turkish sound but occurred in some 'impure' dialects and in one or two words like ühi: in which it seems to be a secondary form of ğ.

The consonants are arranged, when the circumstances demand it, in the following order: b, p, v, (f), (w); c, ç, j; d, ɭ, t; ğ, (velar) k, x; ğ, (post-palatal) k, (h); l; m; n, ɲ, ŋ; r; sı, s; y, z. Note that the letters are arranged in classes, and not in the normal conventional order, but that the first letters of the classes are arranged in the conventional order.

12. There are some particular difficulties in transcribing some early languages, of which the following are the most important:

(1) In Türkî there was a tendency towards dissimilation, so that when a suffix beginning alternatively with a voiced or unvoiced consonant like the Perf. suffix -dî/-tî/-dî/-tî: was attached to a verb ending in a consonant, the unvoiced form was attached to a voiced consonant and vice versa, e.g. ertî:, tâpdi:. In Xak. the position tended to be exactly the opposite, at any rate to the extent that suffixes with voiced initials were attached to verbs ending with voiced consonants, e.g. erdi:, although cases of suffixes with voiced initials being attached to verbs ending in unvoiced consonants are very common, at any rate in our manuscript of Kaş. Chronologically speaking Uyğ. lay squarely between Türkî and Xak. but nearly all the alphabets in which it is written are so ambiguous that it is quite uncertain whether it was a dissimilating language like the former or an assimilating language like the latter, or whether the change took place at some date between the eighth and eleventh centuries. I cannot therefore claim to have been in the least consistent in transcribing Uyğ. texts, usually following the scriptions in the published texts.

(2) The Runic alphabet (see Studies, pp. 51 ff.) in which nearly all the Türkî texts have survived, the Manichaean Syriac alphabet, and the Brāhmi alphabet had different letters for b and p and for ģ and post-palatal k, the other early alphabets did not, and the Brāhmi spellings are very erratic; there is indeed some doubt regarding the phonetic value of some of the letters of this alphabet in its Central Asiatic form. It is therefore almost impossible to decide how some words should be transcribed. In some cases assistance can be got from the modern languages, but some of these have undergone quite considerable phonetic changes.

(3) Only one of the alphabets concerned, Brāhmī, had separate letters for o, u, ə and ü, and the spellings of the texts in this alphabet are often inconsistent. In this case, however, the correct form can often be established if the word was a loan-word in Mongolian, or survives in modern languages; but the spellings in modern languages are often inconsistent, particularly as between languages in the Oğuz group and the rest.

13. The alphabet set out above has also been used for transcribing (or perhaps it would be more accurate to say transliterating, since the system adopted is purely mechanical) quotations from Arabic and Persian texts, with the addition of the following letters: ɬ, đ, ɭ, ɭ, ş, and ç, hamza', 'ayn' and q for the unvoiced velar plosive, which must be distinguished from the unvoiced post-palatal plosive in these languages. In these languages, too, vowel length is indicated in the usual manner by a superscribed line, e.g. ā. The same letters are also used to transcribe Mongolian, but Sanskrit is transcribed in the conventional way.

THE ARRANGEMENT OF WORDS IN THE DICTIONARY

14. As pointed out above, the Turkish texts quoted in this book are written in a variety of alphabets, all more or less ambiguous, and it is often impossible to determine the correct transcription of a number of words; moreover, some words were pronounced slightly differently in different languages. It would, therefore, not be sensible to arrange the words in the strict alphabetical order to which we are accustomed in the dictionaries of European languages, since this would involve a great many double or multiple entries and greatly add to the difficulty of finding individual words. This problem and the means of solving it are discussed in detail in Studies, Chap. 4. The arrangement which emerged from this discussion can be summarized as follows:

(1) The words are broken down into fourteen groups, containing respectively words beginning with the following sounds:

(a) vowels
(b) labial plosives (b, p)
(c) dentic-palatal affricate (č)
(d) dental plosives (t, d)
(e) velar plosives (k, x)
(f) post-palatal plosives (k, g)
(g) l
(h) m
(i) n
(j) r
(k) s
(l) ş
(m) y
(n) z

(2) Each of these fourteen groups is divided into sub-groups; in each case the first sub-group contains monosyllables ending in an open vowel; the order of the remainder is determined in the case of the first group (words beginning with vowels) by the first consonant, and, if there is one, the second consonant or failing that the final vowel, if any, and in the case of other groups by the second consonant, and the third consonant, if any, or failing that the final vowel, if any. For purposes of classification these are the only significant sounds; vowels other than initial and final vowels are disregarded except for purposes of arranging the order of the words in a sub-group.

15. Each sub-group is identified by from one to three code letters representing the significant sounds enumerated above, the code letters being as follows:

A, or if one of the significant sounds is post-palatal
    g or k, E, representing vowels.
B representing labials, b, p, v, (f), (w) but not m.
C representing denti-palatal affricates c, ç, (j).
D representing dentals d, d, t but not n.
G representing velars g, k, x but not η.
G representing post-palatals g, k, (h) but not η.
I representing l.
M representing m.
N representing n, η, ŋ.
S representing s.
Ş representing ş.
Y representing y.
Z representing z.

Each sub-group is divided into the following parts:

(1) monosyllables, if any, coded as Mon.
(2) monosyllabic verbs, if any, coded as Mon. V.
(3) disyllables, coded as Dis.
(4) disyllabic verbs, coded as Dis. V.
(5) longer words, coded as Tris.
(6) longer verbs, coded as Tris. V.

16. In order to locate a word in the dictionary:

(1) declensional and conjugational suffixes must be removed;
(2) the part in which it appears in the dictionary must be determined by converting the significant sounds in it into the appropriate code letters, account being taken of the fact whether it is either a verb or not a verb, e.g.:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Prefix</th>
<th>Code Letter</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>u:</td>
<td>Mon. A</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>u-</td>
<td>Mon. V. A-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ak, oğ, u:ğ, ok</td>
<td>Mon. AG</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>eg-, ek-, ög-, ük-</td>
<td>Mon. V. EG-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>bu:</td>
<td>Mon. BA</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
17. Within each part of a sub-group the words are arranged in the following order, which is designed to make it as easy as possible to locate a word written in any of the various scripts:

(1) in Mon. and Mon. V. in the alphabetical order of the vowel, and when two or more words have the same vowel (o and u, and ö and ü, respectively being regarded as identical since they are not distinguished in these scripts) in the order of the final consonants; thus in Mon. V. AD- the order is ad-, at-, et-, i:d-, it-, u:d-, ut-, üd-, öt-, üt-.

(2) in Dis. and Dis. V.,
   (a) all words ending in a closed syllable precede those ending in an open vowel, thus in Dis. V. ADL- ütül- precedes atla:-;
   (b) if two words contain, in addition to the letters represented in the heading, further consonants belonging to different classes, these determine their order; thus in Dis. V. SCD- săctur- precedes săctas-;
   (c) in other cases, subject to (a) above, the order is determined by the first vowel; thus under Dis. V. SCD- the order is săcit-, săcit-, suçit-, süçit-, and under Dis. V. ADL- atla:-, edle:-, or, if the vowels are identical, by the order of the consonants following, thus under Dis. V. ADL- ödul, uðul-, otul-.

(3) in Tris. and Tris. V. the same principles are observed, mutatis mutandis.

18. Most words in the dictionary are preceded by code letters in capitals, only basic words of which the pronunciation is reasonably certain not being preceded by one. These letters have the following meaning:

(1) C compound; used when a word is composed of two shorter words, e.g. C içkur 'belt', composed of iç and kur. Such words are rare.

(2) D Derived; placed before every word other than a compound which is not a basic word, e.g. D evdıl-, the Passive form of evdî-.

(3) F Foreign; placed before words which are known to be loan-words, e.g. F a:jû:n borrowed from Sogdian. Words which are believed to be loan-words are preceded by ?F if definite proof is lacking.

(4) PU Pronunciation uncertain; see (6).

(5) S Secondary; placed before words which are secondary forms of other words in the list; such words are followed by a reference to the words of which they are the secondary forms.

(6) VU Vocalization uncertain. This prefix is used when the vocalization of a word is uncertain but there is no doubt about its consonantal structure, e.g.
VU eteç indicates that this is the most probable pronunciation of the word but that it might be atâç, atîç, atuç, etc. Words are preceded by PU when there is some doubt about the pronunciation of one or more consonants in them whether or not the vocalization is certain.

(7) When a word is known to have existed at an earlier date but was already obsolete by the eighth century so that it is known only from its derivatives the basic word is entered with a preceding asterisk and followed by cross-references to some of the words derived from it, e.g. 1 *ad-, see adin, adir-.

(8) E Erroneous; unfortunately a few completely non-existent words have found their way into some medieval and modern dictionaries and word-lists owing to misreadings of ancient texts. A small selection of these is included in the list, preceded by E and followed by an explanation, in order to indicate that such words really did not exist and have not merely been overlooked, e.g. E amuç which arises from an erroneous scription of the Arabic word aşâḥḥ in the manuscript of Kaş.

AUTHORITIES QUOTED, WITH SHORT TITLES

I. EARLY TEXTS

19. All quotations in the paragraphs about individual words are preceded by the name of the language in which they were written and the date of composition expressed in centuries denoted by roman numerals: VIII = eighth century A.D. and so on. When two or more quotations are taken from the same language they are grouped under a single head, possibly with different chronological indications.

A. Türki

20. Two periods are distinguished:

(1) VIII. Several major inscriptions in the Runic alphabet fall under this heading; there is a brief note on the best editions of them in Studies, p. 68, but my own quotations are derived, wherever possible, from a personal examination of the photographs and squeezes of the inscriptions. As a result in one or two cases I have, I think, found better readings of some difficult passages than those in any of the editions; examples will be found under olgurt-, berükî, sm-. In addition to the major inscriptions listed separately below there are some shorter inscriptions, but as they are undated and may be later than viii they are included under the next heading. The major inscriptions are the following:

(a) the funerary inscription of Toヌukuk (this is the customary transcription of the name but it is VU) composed probably in the second, but possibly the third decade of viii; cited as T followed by the number of the line;

(b) the funerary inscription of Kül Tégìn, composed in A.D. 732, cited as I followed by the side (E, W, N, S) of the stone and the line on the side;

(c) the funerary inscription of Bilge: Xagan, composed in A.D. 735, cited as II similarly followed;
(d) the funerary inscription of the Küli Çors at Ixe-Xușotu in central Mongolia, roughly contemporary with the preceding; cited as Ix. followed by the line;
(e) the relatively brief inscription at Ongin, cited as Ongin followed by the line.

(2) VIII ff. Under this heading are included texts which may have been composed in VIII, but were possibly, in some cases probably, composed in IX, or perhaps in one or two cases even later. These fall under the following heads:

(a) a few minor inscriptions from Mongolia, of which the most convenient editions are those in the second volume of H. N. Orkun, Eski Türk Yaztları, 3 volumes and index, Istanbul, 1936-41, (cited as ETY followed by the volume in roman and the page in arabic figures). These are occasionally cited under the names given in that volume followed by a reference to ETY II;
(b) those of the so-called Yeniseian (Yen.) inscriptions which were found in Khakassia and were probably erected by minor Western Türkü chieftains who escaped to Khakassia after the fall of the Türkü empire in the middle of VIII, see Studies, p. 69. The most convenient edition is that in S. Ye. Malov, Yeniseiskaya p's'mennost' tyurkov, Moscow, 1952; they are cited as Mal. followed by the number of the inscription and the line, but my readings sometimes differ from Malov’s;
(c) a few inscriptions found at Ayrtam Oy near the town of Talas on the river of the same name and probably datable to IX or X (see Studies, pp. 72 and 256). The texts are almost illiterate and in a deplorable state, and I have quoted them only occasionally, citing them as Talas followed by the number of the inscription and the line;
(d) paper manuscripts in the Runic alphabet. The only substantial one is a book of divination called Irk Bittig, which I cite as Irk B followed by the number of the paragraph and not, as has usually been done, by the page, since the page numbers used do not correspond to those of the actual manuscript. The most convenient edition of the rest, which are rather miscellaneous in character, is in ETY II, but as Orkun’s system of references is rather chaotic I have substituted my own, followed by a reference to the page in ETY II. It is commonly believed that these documents can be dated to about IX;
(e) Manichaean (Man.) texts in the Manichaean Syriac or Uygur alphabets and what Prof. A. von Gabain in her Alttürkische Grammatik, Leipzig, 1941, p. 5 (cited as v. G. ATG) called ‘the N-dialect’, but which seems in fact, see Studies, p. 118, to be Türkü written in a non-Runic alphabet. The longest and most important of these texts is the ‘Confession of Sins’ known as the Chusatuanift (more correctly Xwăstwanëft). The best manuscript, almost complete, is in the British Museum, and there are other fragments, some of the beginning of the text missing in that manuscript, in Germany. The most convenient edition, with a facsimile of the B.M. manuscript, is still that by A. von Le Coq in JRAS 1911, pp. 279 ff., although the translation is not entirely accurate. I cite it as Chias. followed by the line of the B.M. manuscript or, in the case of the first part, as Chias. I followed by the line in von Le Coq’s numeration. The other Manichaean Türki texts which I quote have all been published in the Abhandlungen or Sitzungsberichte of the Academy of Sciences in Berlin (originally the Königliche preussische, later Preussische, and later still Deutsche, Akademie der Wissenschaften). As these publications also contain Manichaean texts in Uyghur and Uyğur-A it is more convenient to list all the publications of Manichaean texts here to avoid additional references in subsequent paragraphs. The main bulk of them is in A. von Le Coq’s Türkische Manichaica aus Chotscho I (AKPAW, 1912); II (APAW, 1919); III (APAW, 1922), cited as M I, II, and III followed by the page and line, the last followed by (i), (ii), etc. if the same line number appears more than once on the same page. Others were published in a series called Türkische Turfan texte (cited as TT), edited at one time or another by W. Bang, A. von Gabain, and G. R. Rachmati (later R. R. Arat), which also contains Uyughur Buddhist and Civil texts. Those parts which contain Manichaean texts (mostly not in Manichaean Türkü) are TT II (SPAW, 1929) cited by page and line, and TT III (SPAW, 1930) and TT IX (ADAW, 1958) both in Uyghur and cited by line. Other short Manichaean texts are in A. von Le Coq, Ein manichäisch-üigurisches Fragment aus Idiqu-Schachri (SKPAW, 1908) cited as Man.-üig. Frag. followed by page and line, and W. Bang and A. von Gabain, Ein üigurisches Fragment über den manichäischen Windgott (Ungarische Jahrbücher VIII, pp. 247 ff.), cited as Wind. followed by the line.

B. Uyghur and Uyğur-A (Uyğ. and Uyğ.-A)

21. The reasons for supposing that two separate, but closely related, Uygh. dialects existed are stated in Studies, p. 42. There are obvious traces of Uyğ.-A in some Buddhist texts, e.g. those in TT VI and TM IV (although it is stated in the introduction to the latter that the Uyğ.-A forms had been ‘corrected’ in the transcription so that they are no longer apparent), but such texts do not seem to be entirely homogeneous, so that it is only in the Manichean texts that it seems possible more or less to isolate the two dialects. Three periods can be distinguished:

(1) VIII. The earliest and most substantial Uyğ. inscription in the Runic alphabet is that situated at Şine-usu in Outer Mongolia, which is the funerary monument of an Uyğur Xiaoan who ruled from A.D. 746 to 759. It is cited as Su. followed by the side and line on the side.

(2) IX. The second such inscription, only fragments of the Uyğ. text of which still survive, is the funerary memorial at Kara Balgasun of an Uyğur Xiaoan who probably ruled from A.D. 808 to 821. It is cited as III followed by a letter and line and a reference to ETY II. The third is the short funerary inscription at Suci in Outer Mongolia, probably datable to the first quarter of IX, and cited as Suci followed by the line.

(3) VIII ff., that is, in this case, texts the earliest of which may go back as far as VIII, although the actual manuscripts are probably later, while the latest, apart from the XvIII manuscript of the Suvarnaprabhāsa Sūtra, the composition of which was much earlier, is probably a Civil document dated firmly to the second lines 1 to 324, the second lines 1763 to 2160, the rest being unpublished); and the Turkish translation of the Suvarṇāprabhuṇāśāstra, published by V. V. Radlov and S. Ye. Malov, St. Petersburg, 1913 ff., cited as Suv. followed by the page and line.

(d) Civil (Civ.) texts, that is not religious. These fall into four classes:

(i) Medical texts, probably mere translations of texts in other languages. The main collection is in G. R. Rachmati, Zur Heilkunde der Uiguren I (SPAW, 1930) cited as H I followed by the line, and II (SPAW, 1932) cited as H II followed by the page and line. There are also one or two such texts in TT VII and VIII.

(ii) Astronomical, astrological, magic, and omen texts, published in TT I (SPAW, 1929), cited by the line, TT VII and VIII and USp. Texts of the first two kinds are mainly translated from the Chinese, generally with an Indian background, and are mostly late in the period; the line between unorthodox Buddhist and purely magical texts is indefinite and I may have put some texts the wrong side of it.

(iii) Commercial and legal documents and (iv) miscellaneous texts. The main collection of these is in USp.; there is one in TT VII, No. 42, a very late text apparently transcribed from an original in the Arabic alphabet, and there are one or two published elsewhere. When quoting the last I have indicated where they may be found.

A good many of the Uyğ. texts listed above have been completely or partially indexed; but no index is available for others, including Suv. which is much the longest, and I cannot guarantee that I have listed every word which occurs in these unindexed texts.

C. Old Kirğiz (O. Kir.)

22. It is commonly believed that those of the Yeniseian inscriptions which were found not in Khakasia but in Tuva were set up by Kirğiz chieftains in that area and are in the Old Kirğiz language. It has been suggested that they are the oldest monuments in the Runic alphabet and may date back as far as vi, but L. R.
Kyzlasov has recently proved by archaeological methods (see Studies, p. 70) that most of them date from ix and x and that some may be even later. I have classified them as ix ff. The most convenient edition is that of Malov mentioned in para. 20 (2) (b), but A. M. Shcherbak has published revised texts of some of them, and some photographs and squeezes are available. I have therefore not always followed Malov’s readings.

D. Xākānī (Xak.)

23. Xak. is a language closely related both to Türkü and to Uyğ., but sufficiently distinct from both to be regarded as a separate language. It was certainly not directly descended from the latter, indeed it existed side by side with Uyğ. for two or three centuries, and was perhaps not quite directly descended from the former. It is first identified in xi, and there are two Xak. xi texts of major quarter of xiv. The actual date of composition of the remainder is quite uncertain; some of the legal and commercial documents are certainly not older than xiii and contain Mongolian, Arabic, and Persian loan-words, but I have taken them into account with suitable precautions, since it is quite impossible to divide these documents neatly into two categories, those anterior and those subsequent to A.D. 1200. These texts can be divided into the following classes:

(a) Christian texts (Chr.). These are likely to be quite early in the period. Only two seem to have survived, the well-known apocryphon about the Magi published in F. W. K. Müller, Uigurica (AKPAW, 1908) pp. 5 ff., cited as U I followed by the page and line, and a fragment published in M III cited by page and line.

(b) Manichaean (Man.) texts in Uyğ. and Uyğ.-A published in the various works listed in para. 20 (2) (e) above. All are fragmentary and vary greatly in length, though none are very long; in the case of the longer texts it is usually possible to determine whether they are in Man. Türkü, Uyğ. or Uyğ.-A; when this is impossible they are cited as Uyğ. The earliest of these texts probably go back to viii and the latest are unlikely to be much later than ix.

(c) Buddhist (Bud.) texts. These have been published in substantial quantities; the following is a list of those which I have quoted. There are four volumes of Uigurica, the first three edited by F. W. K. Müller, the last by A. von Gabain. U I has already been mentioned under (a); U II (AKPAW, 1911), U III (APAW, 1922), and U IV (APAW, 1931) are cited by page and line. The following volumes of the TT series mentioned in para. 20 (2) (e) contain Buddhist texts: TT IV (SPAW, 1930); TT V (SPAW, 1931); TT VI (SPAW, 1934); TT VII (APAW, 1937); TT VIII (ADAW, 1954, the volume containing the texts in the Brähmi alphabet), and TT X (ADAW, 1959). Of these VI and X are cited by the line, IV and V by page and line, and VII and VIII by document and line. There is a useful and complete Analytischer Index zu den fünf ersten Rücken der TT (SPAW, 1931) and VI contains a partial and VII, VIII, and X a complete index of words. Another AKPAW volume containing Buddhist texts is F. W. K. Müller, Zwei Pfahlinschriften aus dem Turfanfund, 1915, cited as Pfahl. followed by the page and line. W. Radloff, Uigurische Sprachdenkmäler, Leningrad, 1928, cited as USp. followed by document number and line, contains inter alia a number of Buddhist texts. Other publications which I have quoted are the following: Paul Pelliot, La Version ouigoure de l’histoire des princes Kalyânûarka et Pâpamkara, T’oung Pao XV. 2, 1914, cited as PP followed by the page and line; W. Bang and G. R. Rachmati, Türkli Cehennemler üzerine Uygurca Parçalar, Türkiat Mecmuası IV, İstanbul, 1934, cited as TM IV followed by the line; Şinasi Tekin, Kuanși Îm Pusar, Erzurum, 1960 (superseding Radloff’s partial edition, St. Petersburg, 1911) cited as Kuan. followed by the line; W. Radloff, Tişastvustik, ein in türkischer Sprache bearbeitetes buddhistisches Sutra, St. Petersburg, 1910, cited as Tiş., followed by the manuscript page and line; A. von Gabain, Die uigurische Übersetzung der Biographie Hüen-tsangs (SPAW, 1935) and Briefe der uigurischen Hüen-tsang-Biographie (SPAW, 1938), both cited as Hüen-ts. followed by the line (the first containing importance. The first is the earliest, and by far the most important, Turkish-Arabic dictionary, the Diwan Luğati'l-Turk of Mahmud al-Kaşgari, dating from the third quarter of XI and cited as Kaş. The quotations in the form Kaş, followed by a roman number and an arabic number and sometimes a second arabic number are from the Turkish translation by B. Atalay, Diwanü Lugat-it-türk Tercumesi, 3 volumes and index, Ankara, 1940-3, since this edition is reasonably accessible, and the index is excellent and comprehensive. The principle which I have followed is to cite the volume and page for main entries and the line as well for quotations from other parts of the book. I have, I hope, included every word which it contains. Atalay's translation is not wholly satisfactory and I have in every case consulted the facsimile (the printed text contains many minor inaccuracies) and normally quote the original Arabic in my citations, so that the accuracy of the translation can be checked. In a number of cases I have altered Atalay's readings and spellings. The second major text is the Kutadgu: Bilig of Yusuf Xaş Hacib of Balasagun, the earliest surviving purely literary text in any Turkish language, also dating from the third quarter of XI. My quotations are taken from R. R. Arat's critical edition, Istanbul, 1947, cited as KB followed by the line in that edition. In cases of doubt I have also consulted the facsimiles of the three manuscripts; in some cases my spellings are slightly different from Arat's. As his index has not yet been published, I cannot guarantee that I have listed every word which occurs in this text, but I have searched it fairly thoroughly. I have classified all the words from these two sources as XI since this date is certain. The Verse Preface of KB is not part of the original text and its language is obviously a little later; quotations from it have therefore been entered under the heading of XII (?) KBVP followed by the line. The Prose Preface is later still and perhaps not really Xaş. but a few quotations from it have been entered as XIII(?) KBPP followed by the line.

E. Oğuz

24. Kaşgari lists a certain number of words in a language which he calls 'the language of al-Guzziya' and says that owing to long contact between the people who spoke it and Persian-speakers it had acquired a number of Persian loan-words, often in a rather corrupt form (see ören and turma). It was no doubt the language spoken by the Oğuz tribes, who were then living in the neighbourhood of the Aral Sea and had to some extent lost contact with the other Turkish tribes. They were descendants of the Oğuz (Tokkuz Oğuz etc.) who had played quite an important part in history during VII and VIII and probably even earlier. There is no reason to suppose that during that period they spoke a language markedly different from that of the Türkü; but although even by XI the Oğuz language had undergone some phonetic decay and accepted a number of loan-words, it retained, and its modern descendants still retain, some characteristics more primitive even than those of Türkü, e.g. initial d- in certain words (see para. 14 (i)). Only a few specifically Oğuz words are listed in Kaş, but they are the earliest surviving specimens of the language.
25. Kāšgāri also cites a number of words in a language which he calls 'the language of Qifcāq', a language which he describes as similar to Oğuz. Several words are mentioned as being common to Kip. and Oğuz but not known in Xak. In xi the Kipçak were west of the Oğuz in southern Russia and Kaş is the earliest authority for their language.

G. Minor eleventh-century dialects

26. Kāšgāri describes a few words as belonging to other contemporary dialects with which he was acquainted; those mentioned most often are the dialects of Arğu, Çigil, and Gancak (the last probably not really Turkish, see Studies, p. 132 and the remarks on kendük below). I have included these words with Kāšgāri’s descriptions of them.

II. MEDIEVAL TEXTS

27. The Uyğ language lingered on for some centuries in Chinese Turkistan (Sinkiang); indeed the latest surviving Bud. Uyğ manuscript, that of the Svarnaprabhāsasūtra already mentioned, was copied in xviii, but the only accessible authority for Uyğ. in this latest state is the Chinese–Uyğ. dictionary (Chin.–Uyğ. Dict.) prepared by a committee of Chinese scholars towards the end of xiv. Some words from this work are included in Radloff’s Wörterbuch and a complete list from another edition was recently published by Prof. L. Ligeti in Un Vocabulaire sino-outouare des Ming, le Kao-tch’ang-kouan Yi-chou du Bureau des Traducteurs, Dissertationes Sodalium Instituti Asiae Interioris II, Budapest, 1966. I have included references to this work as Ligeti, followed by the page.

28. The difficulty about classifying most of the remaining medieval texts, which were, with only one or two exceptions, written by or for Moslem Turks, is that in xi the only literary language in which texts have survived, and probably the only literary language then in use, was Xak., but that towards the end of that century or very soon afterwards literary languages emerged which were written in different areas where the spoken languages were rather different from one another, and so very soon began to pursue different courses. There are interesting discussions of the problem of classifying the texts concerned in Philologiae Turcicae Fundamenta I, Wiesbaden, 1959 (cited as Fundamenta) and more particularly in J. Eckmann’s article ‘Das Chwarezmückische’ in that volume, and also in the introduction to A. K. Borovkov, Leksika sredneaziatskogo Tefsira XIII—XV vv., Moscow, 1963 (cited as Tef.)

29. What can perhaps be called the direct line of descent, or southern stream, evolved in the area called in the early medieval period Khorasan and the southern part of Mā warā’u’ll-nahr (Transoxiana). By xv the literary language used in that area was what is commonly, if inaccurately, called Çağatay (Çağ.), but at any rate three, and probably four, texts have survived which were written between xi and xv (both excluded) in languages intermediate between Xak. and Çağ. The spoken language in this area during this period seems to have been fairly homogeneous with the literary language, except that there was probably a greater concentration of Arabic and Persian, and perhaps from xiii onwards also Mongolian, loan-words in the literary than in the spoken language.

30. Possibly the earliest of these intermediate texts which, since it contains some Mongolian words, cannot be earlier than xiii, is the didactic poem edited by R. R. Arat under the title Atebetü'l-hakayık, Istanbul, 1951, cited as At. followed by the lines.

31. An even earlier date has been suggested for a few Turkish tafsirs, that is interlinear translations of the Koran (mostly bilingual, some trilingual with a Persian translation of the Arabic and a Turkish translation of the Persian) with commentaries and other additional matter. The difficulty in determining the date of these texts and the exact language in which they were composed lies in the fact that the surviving manuscripts of them were all written later, perhaps a good deal later, than the date at which they were composed and have been subjected to a good deal of modernizing by the copyists, later phonetic forms, and even actual words, being substituted for the author's own phonetic forms and words. It is not at all clear whether all, or at any rate all the earlier, bilingual manuscripts go back to a single archetype or whether some are independent translations and compilations, but the latter is the more probable. Borovkov in Tef. has indexed the Turkish vocabulary of one such work, the manuscript of which was found in the town of Karshi. The name of the author, the date of composition, the name of the copyist, and the date of copying are all equally unknown, but the manuscript seems to be later than that of a similar tafsir found in Turkey dated A.D. 1333 (see Tef., p. 4) which is said to have a text close to that of the Karshi manuscript. An examination of the vocabulary shows that it is very heterogeneous. It includes a number of words of great antiquity for some of which, e.g. 2 ap, it is the latest authority. On the other hand, it also includes Arabic, Persian, and even some Mongolian, loan-words, which proves that in its present form it cannot be earlier than xiii, and it even contains different forms of the same word, e.g. aḍril-, ayril-, ayrul-, which belong to different periods in the history of the language. It has been suggested that these are evidence that the language used, even if basically Xak., has been heavily influenced by Oğuz and Kip. and that it must therefore have been composed in some northern area and ought to be classified as Xwarazmian (see para. 37). There is not, however, any conclusive evidence that this is so, and there are other possible explanations of the non-Xak. elements in the text. In the circumstances it seems better to regard the language as intermediate between Xak. and Çağ., to date Tef. as xiii(?) and cite it immediately after At.

32. Next in time, and in much the same language, comes the Qışasu'l-anbiyā of Nāširu'l-din al-Rabgüzi composed in A.D. 1310. In this case, too, all the surviving manuscripts are later than the work itself and have been subjected to a good deal of modernization. No index of the vocabulary has been compiled, but a number of words from a xix printed edition are cited in Radloff’s Wörterbuch and some of these citations have been included here as xiv Rbğ., followed by a reference to Radloff.

33. One Arabic–Turkish vocabulary, the Ḥilyatu’-insān wa ḥalbatu’-lisān of Camālu’d-dīn ibnu’l-Muḥannā (see Studies, p. 193) is probably of about the same date as Rbğ. It contains an extensive list of Arabic words with the Turkish equivalents. The author in his preface says that they are in two languages ‘those of our country and of Turkistan’, and enumerates the phonetic differences between the two. The facts given suggest that the first is an early form of Azerbayjani and the second a late form of Xak., but, except in a minimum number of cases, it is impossible to decide whether any given word belongs to one of these languages or both. Very probably the great bulk of them are early Azerbayjani, but as a matter of convenience it is easier to cite this work as xiv Muh. immediately after Rbğ., followed by the page and line of Melioranskii’s edition (Mel.) and the page of Kilisli Rif’at’s edition (Rif.); the two editions are not identical and it is likely that the latter, which is based on a single manuscript, contains a good many words added to the author’s text by later copyists.

34. Finally there are many texts in Çağatay, the earliest perhaps late xiv, the great bulk xv or even a little later. The language still survives in a later form as modern Uzbek, and no attempt has ever been made to define the latest date at which Çağ. proper was still in use. Apart from a very extensive literature, three major Çağ.–Persian and Çağ.–Old Osmanli dictionaries have been published which, although they all profess to be primarily dictionaries of the language used by Mīr ʿAlī ʿṢir Nawāʾī, probably give a fairly exhaustive list of the Çağ. vocabulary, excluding the Arabic and Persian, but not the Mongolian, words which it includes. These are, in order of age:

(1) Badāʾi’u’l-luḥḥat written in Herat by Tālī’-i Harawī during the reign of the Timurid Sultān Ḥusayn (a.d. 1438–1506), a Çağ.–Persian dictionary of which the only(?) surviving manuscript, dated a.h. 1117 (a.d. 1705–6) was published in facsimile with a comprehensive index by A. K. Borovkov, Moscow, 1961.

(2) The anonymous Çağ.–Old Osmanli dictionary commonly known (after the first entry in it) as the Abūṣka, compiled during the first half of xvi and published by V. de Veliaiminof-Zernof as Dictionnaire djagatai-turc, St. Petersburg, 1869.

(3) The Sanglax, a Çağ.–Persian dictionary written by Muhammad Mahdi Xān and finished in a.h. 1172 or 1173 (roughly a.d. 1759). A facsimile of one of the best manuscripts was published with an introduction and comprehensive indices by myself as E. J. W. Gibb Memorial, New Series XX, London, 1960.

Of these the Sanglax, although the latest, is much the most extensive and best, the author correcting a good many mistakes made in previous dictionaries, including the two mentioned above and others which have not survived. I have cited the first occasionally as Bad. followed by the page, the second more frequently as Vel. followed by the page and the last, almost comprehensively, as San. followed by the page and line of the facsimile.

35. Exaggerated importance has been attached by some scholars to Şayx Sulayman Buxari, Luğat-i Çağatay wa Turki 'Otmâni, Istanbul, A.H. 1298 (A.D. 1881); it contains very little original matter, apart from the mistakes which abound in it (see San., p. 31) but I have occasionally cited it as ŞŞ. followed by the page.

36. There is in Bokhara an important manuscript of the Muqaddimatu'l-Adab of Mahmûdu'l-Zamâxšâri, a classified Arabic glossary compiled early in xii with an interlinear translation in Turkish (as well as in Persian and Mongolian). The manuscript is dated A.D. 1495 and there is no prima facie reason for supposing that the Turkish translation is much older. The language is therefore likely to be Çağ, and this is confirmed by an examination of the Turkish equivalents in N. Poppe's index to the Mongolian translation in Mongol'skii slovar' Mukaddimât al-Adab, Moscow, 1938. Prof. Borovkov, when he died in 1963, had almost completed an index of the Turkish words in this manuscript, but it is uncertain whether it will now be completed and published. The Turkish entries in Prof. Poppe's work are not in a convenient form for use in preparing a Turkish dictionary, and are not, according to Prof. Borovkov, wholly accurate. I have not, therefore, quoted this work except occasionally (as Zam.).

37. The history of the northern stream of literary languages is a great deal more complicated. There was undoubtedly in xii a second literary focus further north than the area described in para. 28, centred perhaps in the court of the Xwârazmshâhs who first became important early in xii. The most convenient name for texts belonging to this stream is that recently adopted in such works as the Fundamenta, Xwarazmian (Xwar.), although the literary language which evolved there must also have been in use over a much wider area extending into southern Russia. The spoken languages in this area at this period were markedly different from Xak.; the Turks in Xwarazm and the Aral Sea area were Oğuz and those in southern Russia Kipcak and already in xi Kâşgâri regarded Oğuz and Kip. as separate languages fairly close to one another but different from Xak. Thus, so far as literary works are concerned, it is safe to assume that Xak. was very quickly modified to bring it closer to the local languages.

38. The oldest text from this area, if its colophon is to be relied on, was in fact composed not in Xwârazm but in the Crimea. It is the Qissa-i Yûsuf written by a certain 'Ali, of whom nothing further is known, in A.H. 630 (A.D. 1233). As usual the manuscripts are a good deal later and have been more or less modernized. D. Brockelmann listed a number of words from this work in 'Ali's Qissa-i Yûsuf, der älteste Vorläufer der osmanischen Literatur (AKPAW, 1917). It has long been recognized that the language is not Osmanli and I have cited the words quoted in this paper as Xvar. xii İli followed by the page, but it may well contain more Öğuz elements than most other Xvar. texts.

39. Another text which can be tentatively identified as coming from the Aral Sea area is the enigmatic text sometimes called Öğuz Nâme (see Studies, pp. 48, etc.) written in the Mongolian Official Alphabet and edited by W. Bang and G. R. Rachmati, Die Legende von Oghuz Qaghan (SPAW, 1932). It contains several Mongolian loan-words and so cannot be earlier than xiii, but can hardly be much later. Considering its subject-matter, the language is likely to be much more specifically Öğuz than most other contemporary texts, but the ambiguity of the alphabet used makes it impossible to determine whether it has such a specifically Öğuz trait as initial d-. It is cited as xiii(?) Öğö, followed by the line in the edition mentioned.

40. Next in order of time come five texts which are all more or less solidly dated. The oldest is the Mu’imir-l-murid written in Xwârazm in A.D. 1313 (see Eckmann, op. cit., p. 115), but I have not been in a position to cite any words from it.

41. The next is the Xusraw u Şirin, written by a certain Quṭb at the court of Tini Beg Xan of the Golden Horde in A.D. 1341–2. It has been admirably edited by A. Zajączkowski, Najstarsza wersja turecka husraw u Şirin, 3 vols., Warsaw, 1958–61, with a facsimile of the only manuscript, a transcription, and a full index excluding the Arabic and Persian loan-words. It is cited as xiv Quṭb followed by the page in Zajączkowski’s index.

42. The third is the Muḥabbat Nâma of Xwarazmi. Two manuscripts of this poem have survived, the second containing a number of verses which did not form part of the original text; see my paper on this poem in CAJ VII. 4, 1962. Unfortunately verses 437 and 440 which state that the poem was composed ‘on the banks of the Sir Darya in A.H. 754 (A.D. 1353)’, are among the interpolated verses but the date must be approximately correct, since it falls within the reign of Cani Beg Xan of the Golden Horde, during whose reign the poem was composed. It is cited from the recent editions (see Studies, p. 48) as xiv MN followed by the number of the verse.

43. Next there is the Nahiçu‘l-Farādis written by Maḥmūd ibn ‘Alî in Xwârazm, or perhaps Saray on the Volga, sometime before A.D. 1358, the date of the earliest manuscript, but not necessarily much before, since there is fairly good evidence that the author did not die until A.D. 1360. A reproduction of one of the best manuscripts was published in J. Eckmann, Nehciçu‘l-Feradis I, Ankara, 1956, but unfortunately his index is not yet published.

44. Finally there is the free translation into Turkish of Sa’di’s Gulistân. Only one manuscript of this work has survived, and a facsimile of it, with a preface by
Preface

Prof. F. N. Uzluk, was published by the Türk Dil Kurumu in 1954 under the title Seyfi Serayi Gülistan Tercümesi. The translator was a native of Sarai on the Volga, but made his translation at the Mamluk court in Egypt in A.D. 1391.

45. Quite recently there has appeared the first half of an admirable dictionary by E. Faizylov of Quth, MN, the Nahcu’l-Farâdis, and the Gulistan, with extensive quotations and references, under the title Starouzbeiskii yazik. Khorezmii Al'omka. XIV veke, Tashkent, 1966. I have used this work extensively to provide references to the Nahcu’l-Farâdis, under the title Nahe. followed by the page and line in Eckmann's facsimile for those words contained in this part of the dictionary; for the rest of the vocabulary I have had to rely on a very inadequate list of words published by Kivâmettin in TM IV. I have not thought it necessary to add references to the Gulistan (Gul.) except very occasionally, since its vocabulary is practically identical with that of the other works mentioned.

46. Apart from the texts mentioned above a few other Xwar. texts have survived and one or two short ones have been published, at any rate in facsimile, but are not cited herein.

47. Seven vocabularies of medieval Kip. have been published, some of them containing some Türkmen (Tkm.) words. The most important, and the only one which is purely Kip., is the Codex Cumanicus, a handbook of the Koman (Kom.) language, a Kip. dialect, in Latin, compiled early in xiv (see Studies, p. 48 and Fundamenta). The text is not entirely homogeneous; the earlier part was compiled for Italian merchants, but it also contains later additions by German missionaries. An index to it was published in K. Grønbech, Komanisches Wörterbuch, Copenhagen, 1942, and is cited as xiv Kom. CCI (for the Italian) and CCG (for the German part); Gr. sometimes followed by the page.

48. The remaining six are all in Arabic, one a list of Turkish words in alphabetical order with Arabic equivalents, the others Arabic handbooks with Turkish equivalents. All these vocabularies have a specified or inferable Egyptian Mamluk background, and it seems clear that basically they are handbooks of the languages spoken by Turkish slaves brought to Egypt from southern Russia, some of them spoke Kip. and others Tkm., an Oğuz dialect. For example, Hou. (see para. 49) seems from internal evidence to have been compiled from oral information collected in the Mamluk possessions in Syria. In some cases an Arabic word is translated by different Kip. and Tkm. words, in others individual words are described as Kip. or Tkm., but in the great majority of cases no such indication is given. The presumption in nearly all cases is that the word is Kip., but there are one or two passages in Id. (see para. 50) which seem to imply the contrary.

49. Until almost today it was generally accepted that the oldest of these vocabularies was the anonymous Arabic–Turkish vocabulary in Leiden manuscript
517. Warner, published in M. T. Houtsma, Ein türkisch-arabisches Glossar, Leiden, 1894, cited herein as xiii Hou. followed by the page and line of the Arabic text. But as this book was actually going to press an article by Barbara Flemming (Hamburg) was published in Der Islam, Band 44, Berlin, June 1968, pp. 226 ff., in which she announced that Houtsma, who purported to publish the exact text of this unique manuscript had converted the date in the colophon into the figures 643, whereas the facsimile published in her article shows quite clearly the words talīta wa arba‘in wa sab‘umiy‘a that is (Ṣa‘bān) A.H. 743 equivalent to (January) A.D. 1343. Instead, therefore, of dating back to xiii and being the oldest of these vocabularies, it goes back only to the middle of xiv and comes chronologically between the two vocabularies mentioned in the following paragraphs. This announcement unfortunately appeared too late for it to be possible to correct the numerous references to Hou. in the dictionary.

50. There are two other xiv vocabularies. The Kitābul-ıdrāk li-lisānîl-ıatrāk, the only list of Turkish words with Arabic equivalents, was written in Egypt, probably in A.D. 1313, by Aṭīrul-dīn Abū Ḥayyān Muḥammad ibn Yūsuf, originally a native of Granada. A critical edition was published by A. Caferoğlu, Abu Hayyān, Kitāb al-Idrāk li-lisān al-İatrāk, Istanbul, 1931. It is cited as xiv İd. followed by the page in the Arabic text.

51. The Kitāb Bulğati’l-muṣṭaq fī luğati’t-turk wa’l-qiṣṣāq was written by Cāmālul-dīn Abū Muḥammad ‘Abdullah al-Turki in the middle of xiv and perhaps also in the Mamluk dominions in Syria. The only manuscript, which is not quite complete, was published with a comprehensive index by A. Zajaczkowski, Manuel arabe de la langue des Turks et des Kiptchaks, Warsaw, I, 1938; II (title in Polish), 1954. It is cited as xiv Bul. followed by the page and line of the printed text in I and the page of the manuscript in II (verbs).

52. There are two xv vocabularies, both surviving in unique manuscripts and dating from early in the century, but it is uncertain which is the older. Al-tuhfatul-zakiya fī luğati’l-turkıya, an Arabic–Turkish vocabulary in alphabetical order, mainly Kip. with a number of Tkm. words, was written almost certainly in Egypt and before A.D. 1426 (the date of a note on the first page). It was edited with a facsimile, translation, and index in B. Atalay, Ettyufet-üz-zekiyye fil-luğat-it-türkiyye, Istanbul, 1945. It is cited as Tuh. followed by the page and line of the facsimile.

53. Al-qawānīnumul-kulliya fī-dahfī‘ul-luğati’l-turkıya was compiled by an unknown author in Cairo by cross-questioning Turks living there. The book is undated, but a reference in it to Tamerlane makes it certain that it was written in xv, and probably early in the century. The text was published by Köprülüzade Mehmed Fuad (Prof. F. Köprülü), Istanbul, 1928. It is cited as Kav. followed by the page and line.
54. Quite recently Prof. Zajączkowski published an account of a short Arabic-Kip. vocabulary entitled al-Durratu'l-mudi'a fi luğati'l-turkiya discovered in Florence, with an extract from the text and an index to the extract, in Rocznik Orientalistyczny XXIX, Pt. i, pp. 39 ff. The work is anonymous and undated but clearly belongs to the first half of xv. It adds little to our knowledge of Kip. but I have quoted a few words from it as xv Dur. followed by the page.

55. The Öğuz language which is conveniently, but not quite accurately, called 'Old Osmanli' (Osm.), since the earliest texts in it date from before the foundation of the Ottoman Empire, is recorded from mid XIII, but the XIII material is scanty. The earliest is a few verses in the works of Mawlana Calalu'd-din al-Rümi (A.D. 1207/8–1273/4) and a few verses in those of his son commonly called Sultan Veled. These verses might more properly be classified as Selcuk, but as they are the first stage of a continuous literary tradition it seems more convenient to classify these very early texts and other slightly later texts which are not strictly Osm., like the Kitab Dede Korkut, which seems to be in a Tkm. language, probably xv., as Osm. so as to avoid an excessively complicated terminology. A good many early works of this kind have been published with partial or complete indices, but it did not seem to me necessary for the purposes of this dictionary to do more than cite under the heading xiv ff. Osm. (since the XIII material is so inconsiderable) those of the words contained in this dictionary which reappear in the Türk Dil Kurumu publication Tanıklarıyle Tarama Sözliği, 4 vols., Istanbul, 1943–5; Ankara, 1953–7 (TTS I–IV) or as 'Rümi' words in San. A new edition of TTS is now being published, but is not yet sufficiently far advanced to make citation from it very convenient.

56. It would not be possible to include in this book all the evidence which could be assembled regarding the survival in modern languages of the early words listed herein without a much greater delay in its publication and a much greater increase in its bulk than would be regarded as advantageous. In any event it is sufficiently obvious to all students of the Turkish languages that common words like at 'a horse' and al- 'to take' still survive almost everywhere to make a detailed proof of the point unnecessary. Nor is it very important, when a basic word is known to survive in some or all modern languages, to know whether its various derivatives survive also. On the other hand, for the reasons stated in para. 8, the subject cannot be entirely neglected, and it is important to include at any rate some references to modern languages. This immediately raises the question how modern languages should be classified and grouped. A good many systems of classification have already been suggested; there are two quite different ones in Fundamenta; but for present purposes it is hardly necessary to use anything more elaborate than a simple geographical system. Even this is open to some objections, since there are no clear-cut geographical lines between the modern descendants of the early languages, and some modern languages descended from different ancient languages have in the course of time developed characteristics which bring them closer to one another than to languages with which they are genetically related. After a good deal of reflection I finally decided upon a sixfold division: north-eastern (NE), south-eastern (SE), north-central (NC), south-central (SC), north-western (NW), and south-western (SW). Of these the NW languages are, genetically speaking, Kip. and the SW Oğuz; the SC and probably SE are, broadly speaking, descended from Xak. but by different lines of descent.

57. In the NE group are included the languages spoken, but until recently not written, in eastern Siberia and adjacent areas. Yakut, however, which has been isolated from the rest so long that it has acquired very special characteristics of its own, is seldom cited, the authority used being E. K. Pekarsky, Slovar' yakutskogo yazyla, St. Petersburg, 1907–39, cited as Pek. The most important authority for the vocabulary of these languages is W. Radloff, Versuch eines Wörterbuches der türk-Dialecte (Opjyt slovarya tyurkskih narechii), 4 vols., St. Petersburg, 1888–1911, cited as R followed by the volume in roman, and the column in arabic numerals, individual languages being mentioned in the abbreviated forms used in that work with the minor alterations of spelling shown in the List of Abbreviations. I have also used the Khakassko-russkii slovar', edited by N. A. Baskakov, Moscow, 1953, cited as Khak. sometimes followed by the page, the Tuvinsko-russkii slovar', edited by A. A. Pal'mbak, Moscow, 1955, cited as Tuv sometimes followed by the page, and occasionally the modern Russian–Khakas, Russian–Tuvan, and Russian–Altay dictionaries.

58. In the SE group are included the Turkish languages and dialects of Chinese Turkistan and adjacent areas, which have traditionally been called Eastern Türk and are now called Neo-Uyğur by Soviet and Chinese scholars. These fall into two main groups, the literary language written in Arabic script and the spoken dialects. I have called both Türki. For the first, citations are from R. B. Shaw, A Sketch of the Turki Language, Calcutta, 1878, cited as Shaw followed by the page, and Burhan Şehidi, Uyğurça-Xenuça-Rusça Luğat (Uigursko-kitaisko-russkii slovar'), Pekin, 1953, cited as BS followed by the page. A good many words in one dialect, Taranç, spoken in southern Siberia are included in R, and are cited as Tar followed by a reference to R. For the rest, mainly dialects spoken in southern Sinkiang, I have used G. Jarring, An Eastern Turki–English Dialect Dictionary, Lund, 1964, cited as Jarring followed by the page. One language in this area is in a class by itself, that of the Sariğ Yuğur in Kansu, the only language which can reasonably be regarded as directly descended from early Uyğ. It is recorded in S. Ye. Malov, Yazyk xeltykh uigurov, Alma Ata, 1957, cited occasionally as Sariğ Yuğ followed by the page.

59. In the NC group are included Kirğız (Kir.) and Kazax (Kzx.), called in R Kara Kirğız and Kirğız respectively. Historically Kir. belongs to the same family as the NE languages and Kzx. seems to be a Kip. dialect, but the peoples talking them have lived in close propinquity to one another for so long that they now have many common characteristics. The authorities which I have used principally are, for Kir., K. K. Yudakhin’s Kirgizko-russkii slovar’, Moscow, 1965, cited as Yud. followed by the page, and for Kzx. Kh. Makhmudov and G. Musabaev, Kazakhko-russkii slovar’, Alma Ata, 1954, and B. N. Shnitnikov’s Kazakh–English Dictionary, The Hague 1966, cited as MM and Shnit. respectively followed by the page. I have also occasionally used the equivalent Russian–Kir. and Russian–Kzx. dictionaries, and only occasionally quoted R since the modern authorities seem to be rather fuller and more reliable.

60. There are several modern SC spoken dialects, but the only literary language is Uzbek (Uzb.) for which I have used A. K. Borovkov, Uzbeksko-russkii slovar’, Moscow, 1959, cited as Bor. followed by the page, and less often the Russian–Uzb. dictionary of 1954. The vocabulary in H. Vambery’s Čagataische Sprachstudien, Leipzig, 1867, is very heterogeneous in character. The bulk of the words in it are classical Çağ. taken, often with some errors, from various oriental authors; the remainder seem to be colloquial xix Uzb. words collected by the author himself, and occasionally cited as Vam. followed by the page.

61. The NW group comprises a rather wide range of languages. Those quoted in R include Kazan Tatar (Kaz. ) and three Karaim dialects, those of the Crimea, Lutsk, and Troki (Kar., Krm., L., and T. ) but he also uses Krm. for the non-Karaim language spoken in the Crimea which is indistinguishable from Osm., so that the only safe indication that a word is Karaim is that it is given in the Hebrew alphabet. The words quoted from these languages are reproduced with the same abbreviations and the reference in R. For Kar. T. I have occasionally used T. Kowalski, Karaimische Texte im Dialekt von Troki, Cracow, 1929, cited as Kow. followed by the page. For (Kazan) Tatar I have used the Tatarsko-russkii slovar’, Moscow, 1966, cited as Kaz. or Tat. , and for Karakalpak (Kk.) and Nogay (Nog.) I have used the Karakalpaksko-russkii slovar’, Moscow, 1958 and the Nogaisko-russkii slovar’, Moscow, 1963, both edited by N. A. Baskakov and cited by the page, and occasionally the Russian–Kk. and –Nog. dictionaries. For Kumyk (Kum. ) there is at present available only the Russko-kumykskii slovar’, Moscow, 1960, edited by Z. Z. Bammattov; Bashkir has diverged so far from the rest of the group that I have not taken it into account. No convenient authorities for minor languages like Karaçay and Balkar are at present available. As regards Chuvash (Čuv. ) see para. 2.

62. In the SW group are included only three languages, Azerbaijani (Az.), Osm. (including Rep. Turkish), and Tkm. For Az. I have used various authorities published in the Soviet Union, not citing them individually. There are many authorities for Osm., but those which I have generally used are Sir James Redhouse, A Turkish and English Lexicon, in the Constantinople, 1921, reprint, cited as Red. followed by the page; Șayx Sami, Qāmūs-i Turki, 2 vols., Istanbul, A.H. 1318 (A.D. 1900–1) cited as Sami followed by the page; and occasionally the
A.H. 1306 (A.D. 1888) edition of the Lehce-i Osmaniya, cited as Leh. followed by the page. In noting the survival of words in modern languages I have not included those words which have recently been re-introduced into Rep. Turkish to replace Arabic and Persian loan-words. Some of these are genuine old words which had become obsolete in Osm., others are old loan-words like acun (for aːjuːn, a word borrowed from Sogdian) and çağ ‘period’ (a medieval loan-word from Mong.), but they have not had a continuous history in Osm.

63. As pointed out in paras. 2 and 12 it is often important in tracing the history of a Turkish word to know whether it became a loan-word in Mongolian and, if so, when, since this often throws light not only on the age of a word but also on its original pronunciation and meaning. The question of such loan-words is discussed at length in Studies, Chap. 11, and it is there suggested that these words were borrowed in three main periods, the first, probably v and vi, during which words were borrowed by a Mongolian-speaking people, possibly the Kitan, from an İfr Turkish-speaking tribe, possibly the Tavğaç; the second, probably between VIII and XII; and the third during and after the reign of Chinggis. The earliest substantial remains of Mongolian are not, however, earlier than XIII. In citing Mongolian words borrowed from Turkish I have normally used three authorities:

(1) E. Haenisch, Wörterbuch zu Manghol un Ni’uca Tobca’an, Leipzig, 1939, which contains a list of the words in the well-known Mong. XIII Secret History (SH), cited as Haenisch followed by the page.

OTHER MODERN AUTHORITIES

64. In addition to the modern authorities quoted above use has been made of the following other modern authorities:

(1) A. Caferoğlu, Uygur Sözluğu, 3 parts, Istanbul, 1934–8, a useful list of the words contained in the indices to the texts enumerated in paras. 20 (2) (e) and 21 above and one or two others, cited as Caf.

(2) v. G., ATG, see para. 20 (2) (e).

(3) G. Doerfer, Türkische und mongolische Elemente im Neupersischen; I Mongolische Elemente, Wiesbaden, 1963; II Türkische Elemente, alif bis tā, 1965; III ditto jim bis kāf 1967, cited as Doerfer, followed by the volume and the number of the word.
(4) C. Broekelmann, Osttürkische Grammatik der islamischen Litteratur-sprachen Mittelasiens, Leiden, 1954, cited as Broekelmann followed by the number of the paragraph.

(5) A. M. Shcherbak, 'Nazvaniya domashnikh i dikh zhivotnykh v tyurk-skikh yazykakh' ('The names of domesticated and wild animals in the Turkish languages'), one of several articles in Istoricheskoie rasvitie leksiki tyurkskikh yazykov, Moscow, 1961, cited as Shcherbak, followed by the page.

(6) The reproductions of MS. No. S. J. Kr. 4638, Packet 8 in the manuscript collection of the Leningrad branch of the Institute of the Peoples of Asia, recently published in D. I. Tikhonov, Khozyaistvo i obschestvennyi stroi uigurskogo gosudarstva X—XIV vv., Leningrad, 1966, and again with transcription and translation by E. R. Tenishev in an article called 'Khozyaistvennye zapisi na drevneugurskom yazyke' in Issledovaniya po grammatike i leksike tyurkskikh yazykov, Tashkent, 1966. The manuscript is a late Uyğ. family archive, and is cited as Fam. Arch. followed by the line.

THE ARRANGEMENT OF INDIVIDUAL ENTRIES

65. In paragraphs 4, 5, and 8 some account has been given of the kind of information which is supplied about individual words. There is not a single word regarding which the full range of information is available, and it may therefore be useful to set out here what the full range is and how the various items are arranged. The word may be preceded by a code letter (see paragraph 18). If it is a hapax legomenon (see paragraph 7) it is immediately followed by 'Hap. leg.' From this point the order varies slightly. It is sometimes convenient to enter next the original meaning possibly with some remarks on later developments, but this is superfluous if the word is Hap. leg., since the quotation will supply it, and if the word is derived it is more logical to record the derivation before the meaning. After this it may be desirable to add some other remarks. If the fact that the word is a loan-word in Mongolian is relevant, this is mentioned next. Information regarding the survival of the word then follows. It cannot be given earlier since there are many instances of words surviving in modern languages, usually NE, not because they have existed continuously in those languages but because they have been reborrowed from Mongolian, perhaps quite recently. Finally, cross-references may be given to other words etymologically related or other words with the same or a similar meaning. The quotations then follow in the following order: Türgü v; vii ff.; viii ff. Man.; viii ff. Yen.: Uyğ. viii; ix; viii ff. Chr.; Man.-A; Man.; Bud.; Civ.; xiv Chiń.-Uyğ. Dict.: O. Kir. ix ff.: Xak. xi (including KB); xii(?) KBVP; xiii(?) KBPP; At.; Tef.; xiv Rbg., Muh.: Arğu, Çigil, Gancak: Çağ. xv ff.: Oğuz xi: Xwar. xii 'Ali'; xiii(?) Oğ.; xiv Qurṭb, MN, Nahc.: Kip. xii: Kom. xiv CCI, CCG; Gr.: Kip./Tkm. xii Hou.; xiv Id., Bul.; xv Tuh., Kav., Dur.: Osm. xiv ff.

66. In conclusion may I very humbly submit that this book contains a vast number of quotations, translations, and references, and that it is hard to believe that in such a large flock there are no black sheep? May I plead, as the father of Turkish lexicography did nine centuries ago, that yazma:s atım yağmur yanlışla:s bilge: yanık: ‘the only shot that never misses is the rain, the only scholar who never makes a mistake is the echo’ Kaş. III 379, 20, and present in advance my apologies for these and other shortcomings.

It would not be proper for me to end this preface without expressing my sincere gratitude to the British Academy for their generous contribution towards the cost of producing this volume.

SUFFIXES

The importance of Suffixes in the formation of the Turkish vocabulary needs no explanation, and nearly every Turkish grammar contains lists of the Suff.s. (excluding declensional and conjunctional Suff.s.) used to form derived words. There are, for example, extensive lists in v. G., ATG, paras. 44 to 167 and Brockelmann, paras. 20 to 121 and 148 to 176. I included such a list in Studies, pp. 143 ff. and made some corrections and additions to it in Three Notes on Early Turkish, Türk Dili Araştırımları Yılığı, 1966, pp. 1 ff. The following is a more complete list of the Suff.s. identified in this dictionary. It is divided into five parts, each arranged in a reversed alphabetical order from the last letter backwards. The first two parts contain the Suff.s. attached to Nouns (including under this heading all words which are not Verbs) and Verbs respectively to form derived Nouns, and the next two parts the Suff.s. attached to Nouns and Verbs respectively to form derived Verbs. The fifth is a list of Noun endings, which are not technically Suff.s., since if they are removed what is left is not a recognizable Turkish word, but are found at the end of a sufficient number of Nouns with similar meanings to suggest that they form a class of some sort. Two of these endings are known Iranian Suff.s., and the words to which they are attached must be Iranian loan-words. Some other endings are not recognizably, or even probably, foreign and seem to go back to a period far beyond our ken, when the Turkish vocabulary was being built up by methods which have long since been forgotten. Between these two classes are some endings which might be, but are not necessarily, foreign. It is noticeable that there is a high proportion of names of animals, insects, and plants in words with these endings.

It should be noted that, although there is commonly supposed to be a clear distinction between Denominal and Deverbal Suff.s., the division is not at all clear cut; several Suff.s. which might be regarded as properly Den., like -çı:, -duruk, also occasionally occur as Dev. Suff.s., and the Dev. Suff. -ma:k occasionally as a Den. Suff.

Scattered through Kaş. are several remarks on the functions of some of these Suff.s.; the relevant references are given in the lists below.

The concept of Active, Passive, Transitive, and Intransitive Verbs is a familiar one in all grammars; in Turkish the same terms must necessarily also be applied to N.s and N./A.s, since, for example, Dev. N.A.s like sinuk (sin- -uk) ‘broken’, köçürme: (köçür- -me:) ‘travelling (stove)’, and eşidüt ( eşid- -üt) ‘hearing’ can be translated only by Participles.

The word ‘dominant’ applied to a Suff. beginning with a vowel means that this vowel is an integral part of the Suff. and if the word to which it is attached ends in a vowel it is the latter that is elided, e.g. tarmut (tarm(a:-) -ut).

When a Suff. consisting of, or beginning with, a vowel is attached to a Dis. or Dis.V. ending in a consonant the second vowel of the V. is usually, but not always, elided, e.g. adri: (ad(r)-i:-), but biriki: (birik-i:-).
SUFFIXES

It should be noted that when a Suff. beginning with \(-\ddot{g}\/-\ddot{g}\) is attached to a word ending with \(-n\) the two sounds are combined as \(-\eta\), e.g. yan\(\ddot{a}\)k (yan-\(\ddot{a}\)k) and that when such a Suff. is attached to a word ending in \(-\ddot{g}\/-\ddot{g}\) or \(-k\) in both cases the two sounds are combined as \(-kk\), which became in practice \(-k\), e.g. baku: (bak-\(\ddot{g}\)u:), tiken (tik-\(\ddot{g}\)en), yaku: (ya\(\ddot{g}\)-\(\ddot{g}\)u:).

I. NOMINAL SUFFIXES

(a) Denominal (Den. N.)
-\(\ddot{c}\)a: about half a dozen words carry this Suff., which is more in the nature of an Equative Case-ending than a Suff. Most are Advs., like an\(\ddot{c}\)a; but at least one, bar\(\ddot{c}\)a: is used as a N./A. The Dim. Suff. \(-\ddot{c}\a:/-\ddot{c}\e\):, which did not appear till the medieval period, was borrowed from Pe.
-\(\ddot{k}\)e: Dim. Suff., only(?) in si\(\ddot{g}\)irke:, yipke:, perhaps a crasis of \(-\ddot{k}\)i\(\ddot{n}\)e:
-\(\ddot{a}\)a:-\(\ddot{l}\)e: very rare; forms Advs. in ayla:, tünle:, and perhaps birle:, and Adjs. in körkle:/körtle: if these are not l.-w.s.
-\(\ddot{k}\)i\(\ddot{n}\)a:/\(\ddot{k}\)i\(\ddot{n}\)e: Dim. Suff.; very rare.
-ra:/\(\ddot{r}\)e: forms Loc. Advs., e.g. iç\(\ddot{r}\)e: ‘inside, within’; very rare.
-ya:/\(\ddot{y}\)e: only in bér\(\ddot{y}\)e:, yîr\(\ddot{y}\)a:, prob. Sec. f. of \(-\ddot{r}\)a:/\(\ddot{r}\)e: -\(\ddot{c}\i\) :-\(\ddot{c}\i\): forms N.Ag.s; see Ka\(\ddot{s}\) II 48; very common.
-\(\ddot{n}\)çı:/\(\ddot{n}\)çi: See -\(\ddot{n}\)ç.
-tu:/\(\ddot{t}\)i: forms Advs. from Adjs., e.g. ed\(\ddot{g}\)/\(\ddot{t}\)i:; very rare; ? also a Dev. Suff.
-\(\ddot{n}\)tı: forms an Ordinal, only in \(\ddot{e}\)kkînti: ‘second’; perhaps an earlier form of -\(\ddot{n}\)ç.
-tırtı:/-tırtı:, etc. forms Loc. Advs., e.g. içtırtı: which is practically syn. w. iç\(\ddot{r}\)e:; very rare.
-\(\ddot{k}\)ı:/\(\ddot{k}\)ı: forms N./A.s describing position in time or space, e.g. aş\(\ddot{n}\):\(\ddot{k}\):i: ‘former’; û\(\ddot{z}\):\(\ddot{k}\):i: ‘situated on or above’; fairly common in the early period; later the practice grew up of attaching this Suff. only to words in the Loc., e.g. evdeki: ‘in the house’.
-\(\ddot{d}\)u: dubious; only(?) in kardu: which might be a Dev. N.
-\(\ddot{g}\)u:/\(\ddot{g}\)ü very rare as a Den. Suff.; forms A.N.s like \(\ddot{e}\)nç\(\ddot{g}\):ü:, Conc. N.s like tu\(\ddot{g}\):u:, and Adj.s like bu\(\ddot{q}\):\(\ddot{g}\):u:; also a Dev. Suff.
-a:\(\ddot{g}\)u:/\(\ddot{y}:\(\ddot{g}\)ü: dominant; forms Collectives, usually fr. Numerals e.g. ûç\(\ddot{e}\):\(\ddot{g}\):ü: ‘three together’, but see also iç\(\ddot{e}\):\(\ddot{g}\):ü:, yîz\(\ddot{e}\):\(\ddot{g}\):ü:.
-\(\ddot{n}\)ü: only(?) in esrin\(\ddot{ü}\): syn. w. esrî: ‘dappled’; also a Dev. Suff., but this word can hardly be a Dev. N./A.
-\(\ddot{r}\)u:/\(\ddot{r}\)ü: Directive Suff. meaning ‘towards’; very rare; syn. w. -\(\ddot{g}\)aru:/\(\ddot{g}\)erü:.
-\(\ddot{g}\)aru:/\(\ddot{g}\)erü: Directive Suff. like -\(\ddot{r}\)u:/\(\ddot{r}\)ü:; hardly to be explained as that Suff. attached to the Dat., since it is attested in dialects earlier than those in which the Dat. Suff. -\(\ddot{k}\)a:/\(\ddot{k}\)e: became -\(\ddot{g}\)a:/\(\ddot{g}\)e:; rather rare.
-layu:/\(\ddot{y}\)eyü: meaning ‘like’, e.g. bûrîleyü: ‘like a wolf’; properly Ger. in -u:-\(\ddot{u}\): fr. a Den. V. in -\(\ddot{a}\):-\(\ddot{a}\)-\(\ddot{a}\):-, but usually the only recorded form of the V. concerned.
-ç (after vowels) /-aç/-eç/-iç/-iç (after consonants) Dim. Suff.; very rare, esp. the last two.

-ğać, etc. function obscure; only (?) in odağç, kuşgaç, and perhaps sügliç; also a Dev. Suff.

-leç certainly Turkish in üçleç; otherwise see List III.

-nç/-ınç/-ınç/-ünç/-ünç the ordinary early Suff. of Ordinals; replaced in the medieval period by -nçi/-nçî, etc.; see also -ntî.

(F) -t a Sogdian Plur. Suff. found in tégîht, tarxat Plurs. of tégîn, tarkân which are prob. very old l.-w.s.

(-ta:ğ/-teğ in words like antağ ‘thus’ is not a Suff. but the Postposition te:ğ fused w. the stem of ol.)

-liğ/-lig/-lüğ/-lüg forms Poss. N./A.s, see Kaş. I 500; very common.

-sığ/-sig forms N./A.s meaning ‘resembling (something)’ and the like; properly Dev. N./A.s in -ğ/-g fr. Simulative Den. V.s in -si:-/-si:-, but the actual V.s are seldom recorded; rare.

-k/ (after vowels and -r) -ak/-ek (the normal forms) /-ık/-ık/-ük/-ük (all rare) usually forms Dim. N.s, but also less restricted words like ortuk; fairly common.

-çak/-çek forms Conc. N.s, usually N.I.s, e.g. ağırcak ‘spindle-whorl’; rare.

-çuk/-çük as correctly stated in Kaş. III 226 forms Dim. N.s, but generally w. a metaph. sense; e.g. baka: ‘frog’, bakaçuk ‘muscle’; very rare in the early period, later became the commonest Dim. Suff.

-dak/-dek and also (?) -duk/-dük both very rare w. uncertain functions, see bağırdak, beliındek, burunduk; in the last perhaps a crasis of -duruk; beliındek might be a Dev. N./A. in -k fr. a Den. V. in -de:- fr. beliŋ.

-ğak/-gek usually forms Conc. N.s, e.g. eşek, kidızge:k, münüüzge:k, yaşak; very rare, but a common Dev. Suff.

-ğuk dubious, only (?) in çamğuk; commoner as a Dev. Suff.

-lık/-lik/-lük/-lüüs usually forms A.N.s, but quite often Conc. N.s; its various usages are analysed in Kaş. I 505; 510–11.

-mak/-mek forms Conc. N.s, e.g. kögüzmek, but the connection w. the basic N. is sometimes tenuous; very rare, but common as a Dev. Suff.

-muk/-a:muk forms N.s some of which seem to be pejorative, e.g. kara:muk, sola:muk; very rare.

-ňak perhaps Dim.; only (?) in bakaňak ‘the frog in a horse’s hoof’.

-rak/-rek forms Comparative Adjs.; common.

-duruk/-dürük usually forms N.s describing pieces of equipment, e.g. boyunduruk ‘yoke’; rather rare; also a Dev. Suff.

-sa:kl/-se:k properly Dev. N./A. fr. a Den. V. in -sa:-/-se:- but the V. itself is sometimes not recorded; very rare attached to basic N.s, e.g. tavarsa:k, less rare attached to Dev. N.s in -ğ, etc., e.g. barışsa:k; see Kaş. I 24; II 55–6.

-suk/-sük function obscure; forms Conc. N.s, e.g. ilersük, bağırsuk, sıparsuk and N.I.s, e.g. taňsuk; perhaps Dev. Suff. in -uk/-üük fr. Simulative Den. V.s in -si:-/-si:-.
-çil/-çil forms N./A.s of addiction, e.g. iççil 'sickly' fr. iç 'disease'; rare.

-ğil/-ğil (a) attached to Numerals, e.g. üçğil 'triangular'; (b) otherwise forms N./A.s relating to colour or shape, e.g. başğil, tarğil,kırğil, yıpğil, yalğıl; rare; also Dev. Suff.

-sıl in arsıl, syn. w. a:r, 'auburn'; prob. a Dev. N./A. in -sil fr. a Simulative Den. V. in -si:-; the alternative spelling arsal is improbable; both words are Hap. leg.

-im/-im forms Conc. N.s, only(?) in edrim, barım; a common Dev. Suff.

-dam/-dem forms N./A.s meaning 'resembling (something)', e.g. tepridem 'god-like'; rare.

-a:n/-e:n/-un an obsolete Plur. Suff. (see Kaş. I 76); only(?) in oğla:n, ere:n, bodun, and perhaps öz.e:n.

-çın/-çin function obscure; only(?) in balıkçın, kökçin/köksin.

-tın/-tun/-din/-dun, etc. a Loc. Suff., e.g. taştın 'outside'; to be distinguished fr. the partially homophonous Abl. Suff.

-ğan/-ge:n forms Conc. N.s w. a more restricted meaning than the basic N.; e.g. arpağan, temürğen; very rare; also a Dev. Suff. and an Ending.

-ğun/-a:ğun etc. (also -ge:n in yettige:n) forms Collectives, e.g. alkuğun, kadına:ğun, kelinün; very rare; cf. -a:ğu/-e:ğü:.

-kam/ke:n forms an Adj. in teprı:ken 'devout', and Temporal Adv. in amtıkan, ançagınçakan; very rare; also an Ending.

(-man)/-men function obscure in (PU) kükmen, közmen; in Türkmen prob. a corruption of Pe. Suff. -mand 'resembling'; also a Dev. Suff.

-şin. See -çin.

-in/-iğ Adj. Suff. in yéliğ 'windy'; Dim. Suff. in kölüş 'puddle'; also a Dev. Suff.

-dan/-du:ğ, etc. forms Conc. N.s only(?) in otuğ, ildağ, and perhaps izdeğ.

-ar/-er (also -rer in ikkirer)/-sar/-şer (after vowels) forms Distributives after Numerals, e.g. birer 'one each', and Adj.s of quantity, e.g. azar 'a few each'; very rare; also a Dev. and Conjugational Suff.

-ş/-iş/-uş, etc. function obscure; see ödüş, bağış, 2 ba:ş, kökış; very rare; also a Dev. Suff.

-da:ş/-de:ş forms N.s of Association indicating that two persons have a common possession of some kind, e.g. kada:ş 'kinsman', yerde:ş 'compatriot'; see Kaş. I 406. It has been plausibly suggested that this Suff. is a crisis of the Loc. Suff. -da/-de: and é:ş 'companion'. Rather rare.

-mış/-miş only in altmiş, ýetmiş 'sixty, seventy', a common Conjugational Suff.

-gey only(?) in küçgey 'violent' fr. kü:ş 'violence'.

-z demonstrably a Den. N. Suff. only in ékkiz 'twin' fr. ékki:; also a Dev. Suff. and an Ending.

(-tüz in küntüz, q.v., is prob. a separate word not a Suff., cf. -ta:ğ.)

-siz/-siz/-süz/-süz forms Priv. N./A.s connoting the non-possession of a thing, quality, etc.; the opposite of -lığ, etc.; cognate to the Den. V. Suff.

-sıra:, etc.; very common.
(b) DEVERBAL (Dev. N.s)

-a:/e:/-i:/-i:/-u:/-ü taken together fairly common; there is no discoverable rule prescribing which Suff. should be attached to any given V., all being attached to V.s with unrounded and with rounded vowels; when one is attached to a V. ending in a vowel a euphonic -y- is inserted, e.g. ula:yu:. Usually forms Advs., less often Conjunctions, like öprü:, Postposns. like tapa:, Conc. N.s like oprı:, adrı:, A.N.s like 3 kéce: or Adjs. like egrı:, köni:.

-ğa:/-ğe: forms Adj.s., e.g. kışğa;; N./A.s, usually Active, e.g. öğe:, bilğe;; and N.s either Intrans; e.g. kölğe: or Pass., e.g. tilğe;; rare and obsolescent; also an Ending.

-ma:/-me: forms Pass. N.s and N./A.s; fairly common; its use as an ordinary Dev. N., N.Ac., etc., prevalent in Osm., did not develop till the medieval period.

-ğma:/-ğme: properly a Conjunctational Suff.; occasionally forms N.s like tanığma: 'riddle'.

-çt:/-çl: forms N.Ag.s, e.g. ota:çl:, ok1:çl;; common Den. Suff., very rare as a Dev. Suff.

-ğu:çt:/-ğü:çl: properly a Conjunctational Suff., see Kaş. II 49, but occasionally forms N.Ag.s, e.g. ayğu:çl:, bitığü:çl:.

-di:/-di:, etc. a common Conjunctational Suff., sometimes used to form Pass. N./A.s, usually attached to Refl. V.s, e.g. üdründi:, occasionally to basic V.s, e.g. ögdı:, alka:di:, sökti:.

-ti:/-ti: different fr. the foregoing; used to form Advs., e.g. artı:, uza:tı:, tüke:tı; very rare; also a Den. Suff.

-çu:/-çl: forms Pass. N./A.s; attached only to Refl. f.s; syn. w. -di:, etc.; rare.

-du:, etc. in egdü:, umdu:, süktü: seems to be a Sec. f. of di:.

-ğu:/-ğü: properly a Conjunctational Suff. but forms a good many N.s and N./A.s; rather more than half are N.I.s, e.g. bile:ğü: 'whetstone'; most of the remainder are Conc. N.s, e.g. kedğü: 'clothing'; the rest are miscellaneous, e.g. oğla:ğü: 'gently nurtured'; it appears in crasis in words like ertiğü: and yaku:.

(-yul:, etc.; see -a:, etc.)

-ç forms ordinary N.Ac.s, N./A.s.s, etc.; attached only to Refl. f.s (and tín-); prob. a crasis of -iş etc. which seems not to be attached to Refl. f.s in the early period; common.

-ğa:ç/-ğec only(?) in bösgçe, a Conc. N., and kısğać, a N.I. in the early period but commoner later; perhaps merely a Sec. f. of -ğuç.

-ğuç/-ğüç normally forms N.I.s, e.g. biçğuç; rare; also a Den. Suff.

-maç/-meç forms names of foodstuffs, e.g. tutmaç; rare.

-t (only after -r-)/-ut/-ü dominant; forms N.Ac.s, A.N.s, and Conc. N.s which are usually Active; rare.

-ğut/-ğüt usually describes persons, e.g. alpa:ğut, uruŋut, bayą:ğut, and (etymologically obscure) uralğut; also forms A.N.s, etc. in öğüt, çapğüt, kızğut, etc.; very rare and obsolescent.
-ğ/-ığ/-iğ/-uğ/-ığ the commonest Dev. Suff.; forms a wide range of Dev. N.s and N./A.s, N.Acs, etc.; see Kaş. I 26–7.

-çığ/-çığ forms Intrans. and Pass. N./A.s; attached only to Refl. f.s; perhaps a crisis of -çsiğ/-çsiğ, in which case the words concerned are N./A.s in -ğ fr. Simulative V.s in -si:-/-si:- fr. Dev. N.s in -ç.

-k (after vowels and -r/-r/-ak/-ek/-ik/-ik of these -k is rather common, the rest rather rare. Practically syn. w. -ğ; there does not seem any discoverable rule for deciding which Suff. should be used, but on the whole most words ending in -ğ, etc. are N.s and most words ending in -k, etc. are N./A.s, but it also forms A.N.s, e.g. emge:k, kılik; Conc. N.s, e.g. kesek, and N.I.s, e.g. biçak. See Kaş. I 27.

-ünk/-ünk (-ök/-ök) dominant (e.g. in ağrük, esrük); usually forms Intr. or Pass. N./A.s; also a few Pass. N.s, e.g. buyruk, köpük, kölük. Common.

-çak/-çek and -çük/-çük not direct variants since the first is also attached to V.s containing rounded vowels and the second to V.s containing unrounded vowels; the semantic difference may be the same as that between -ak and -uk. Both form Conc. N.s and N.I.s; rare. Also a Den. Suff.

-dak/-dek it is doubtful whether this is a Dev. as well as a Den. Suff., but derdak looks more like a Dev. N. than a Den. N.

-duk, etc. properly a Conjugational form (Perfect Participle, etc.) but Kaş. I 65 may well be right in defining ağduk as a Dev. N./A. w. this Suff.

-ğa:k/-ğe:k usually forms N./A.s connoting habitual or repeated action; also a few Conc. N.s, e.g. içge:k, kudurğa:k, and N.I.s, e.g. biçğa:k, tarğa:k w. the same connotation implied; cf. -ğa:n/-ğen.

-ğuk/-ğük forms Conc. N.s and some N.I.s; rare.

-ma:k/-mek properly the Infinitive Suff., but also used to form a few Conc. N.s, e.g. çakma:k, and, with vocalic assimilation, ügrümük.

-duruk/-dürük forms N.s describing pieces of equipment, e.g. tizildürük; very rare; also a Den. Suff.

-sık/-sık forms N.Acs, usually Intrans.; properly the Suff. -k attached to a Simulative V. in -si:-/-si:-, but the V.s themselves are not noted; rare.

-yük/-yüük properly a Conjugational Suff., see v. G. ATM, para. 218, but forms some Intrans. N./A.s; note the -n-y- crisis in bulğa:nik, etc.; rare.

-ı (after vowels)/-ı/-il/-il forms N./A.s usually Intrans. or Pass.; rare.

-ğil/-gil in kubğil relates, like the Den. Suff., to colour; in biçğil forms a N.I.; very rare.

-m/-ım/-ım/-um/-üm properly describes a single action, e.g. olüm ‘death’ (you can only die once) or içim ‘a single drink’, but sometimes used less precisely as a N.Ac. or Conc. N.; common.

-n/-en-(only in evren, tevren) /ı/-ın/-ın/-ün partially dominant, see, e.g. uzun, tütün fr. uzan:ı, tüse:ı, but after vowels -n is more usual; forms N./A.s and Conc. N.s, usually Intrans.; not very common.

-ğa:n/-ğe:n properly a Conjugational form, Present Participle, but, at any rate in Kaş, connoting repeated or habitual action, see Kaş. I 24; II 53; fairly common; cf. -ğa:k/-ğe:k; also a Den. Suff. and Ending.
II. VERBAL SUFFIXES

(a) DENOMINAL (Den. V.s)

-ə:/-e:-/-i:-/-u:-/-ü:- the first two fairly common, the rest rare; attached only to consonants; prob. the oldest Den. V. Suff., forms Intrans. and less often Trans. V.s; see Kaş. I 20.

-da:-/-de:-/-ta:-/te:- rare and attached only to a limited range of consonants, forms only (?) Trans. V.s.

-ka:-/-ke:- very rare; only(?) in irinçke:- and yarlıka:-, and, in the Refl. f., ağrkan-; in the last two the -k- is a crasis of -gk-.

-ırka:-/urka:-, etc. function obscure, very rare; see taşırka:-, təoyora:-, and, in the Refl. f., alpırkan-, özirken-; see the Dev. Suff. -ırkan-.

-la:-/-le:- attached to all vowels and consonants; forms Trans. and Intrans. V.s; when attached to the names of parts of the body means ‘to strike on the...’; see Kaş. I 22; much the commonest Den. Suff.

-ra:-/-re:- a very rare Sec. f. of -la:-/-le:-, e.g. kekre:-, kökre:-.

-sıra:-/-sire:- forms Priv. Den. V.s meaning ‘to be without, or deprived of, something’, e.g. ögsire:-; cognate to the Den. N. Suff. -siz, etc.; rare and obsolescent.
-sa:-/se:- forms Desid. V.s; fairly common; these V.s form two classes: (1) those derived fr. basic N.s, e.g. evse:- 'to long for home'; (2) those derived fr. N.Ac.s, e.g. barı̇g̡sa:- 'to wish to go'. Also a Dev. Suff., equally common; in Kaş. I 281, 11 it is said that barsa:- is permissible, but barı̇g̡sa:- the more usual form. See also I 279 ff.
-li:- (-li:-) very rare Sec. f. of -la:-/-le:-, e.g. tumli:-.
-si:-/si:- forms Simulative Den. V.s, e.g. açı̄g̡si:-; very rare in the basic f. but see -sin/-sin-; see Kaş. I 282; also a Dev. Suff.
-d- (after vowels) /a:d/-/e:d- (after consonants) these V.s are usually Intrans. and mean 'to be, or become (something)', but occasionally Trans., e.g. köze:d-; as in the Perf. the -d- merged with the Suff. -ti:/-ti: and became -tti:/-tti;, Kaş. erroneously indexed some of these V.s w. final -t- but it is unlikely that this was the pronunciation except in the Perf.
-it- (? -id-) the nature of this Suff. in töni̇t- and teri̇t- is obscure.
-k- (only after vowels) /-ı̄k/-/ı̄k/-/uk/-/ük- forms Intrans., and occasionally Pass., V.s; see Kaş. I 20; II 118, 165; rather common.
-l- forms Intrans. V.s, e.g. tusul-; very rare; also a Dev. Suff.
-sın/-sin- the Refl. f. of -si:-/si:- forming Intrans. Simulative V.s; rare when attached to basic N.s, e.g. uluğ̡sin-, but fairly common when attached to N.S.A.s in -m, etc., e.g. alı̄msin- translated in Kaş. I 20 'to pretend to take, without actually taking'; see also II 202, 259; there are several hybrid forms like begı̄msin- in which -ım- is inserted between the basic N. and the Suff.
-r- (after vowels) /-ar/-/er- (the ordinary form after consonants) /-ı̄r/-/ı̄r- (very rare, after Dis. N.s in which the second vowel, -ı/-ı-, is elided, e.g. kurığı̇fr. kurı̇ğ̡) forms Intrans. V.s; see Kaş. II 163; fairly common.
-ğar/-ger/-kar- (after -) /(-ker-ğ) normally forms Trans. V.s, occasionally Intrans.; fairly common.
-ğir/-gir- forms Inchoative V.s meaning 'almost to do (something); to be on the point of doing (something)', (see Kaş. II 200, which relates to Dev. V.s); e.g. tazı̄g̡r-, tozı̄g̡r-; very rare; also a Dev. Suff.
-ş- identical w. the Dev. Suff. -ş-, etc.; noted only in arkaş-.

(b) DEVERBAL (Dev. V.s)

-sa:-/se:- forms Desid. V.s; see Kaş. I 21; also a Den. Suff.; fairly common.
-si:-/si:- forms Simulative V.s, e.g. emsi:-; very rare; also a Den. Suff.
-d- Trans. and prob. Emphatic in to:d-, ko:d-, yo:d-, yu:d-.
-t- (after vowels and -r-) /-ı̄t/-/ı̄t/-/ut/-/ǖt- the only common Suff. of Caus. V.s fr. basic V.s ending in vowels; the other forms are rather rare. See Kaş. I 20.
-k- (after vowels and -r-) /-ı̄k/-/ı̄k/-/uk/-/ük- when attached to Intrans. V.s intensifies the meaning, e.g. a:ç- 'to be hungry'; a:çık- 'to be famished', see Kaş. I 20; when attached to Trans. V.s forms either Pass. V.s, e.g. sanı̄ç- 'to rout'; sanı̄çık- 'to be routed'; or Intrans. V.s, e.g. böyle- 'to divide, separate' (Trans.); bölǖık- 'to separate, part' (Intrans.); rather rare.
-tık/-duk- forms Emphatic Pass. V.s, only(?) in buldük-, bastık-.
-sık-/sık-/suk-/sük- forms Emphatic Pass. V.s, e.g. bil- ‘to know’; bilsık- ‘to be well known, notorious’; see Kaş. I 21; II 138, 237; rare.
-l|-l|-l|-l|-ül- the normal Suff. for Pass. V.s; see Kaş. I 21; II 138, 237; very common.
-n-/-ın-/-ın-/-ün-/-ün- forms Refl. V.s, which acc. to Kaş. had four shades of meaning ‘to do something to oneself, for oneself, or by oneself; or pretend to do something but not actually do it’ (the last practically unknown elsewhere); it was also used to form Intrans. and sometime Pass. V.s fr. Trans.; see Kaş. I 21, II 168, 254; very common.
-ırran-/-ırken- in isırken-, kısırkan-; function obscure; see Den. V.Suff. -ırra:-.
-r- (in one or two V.s, örper-, kurır, yelpır-, etc.)/-çir/-çir- (in tamçır-külçır-)/-gır/-gır- (perhaps occasionally -ğur/-ğer-; rare) /-sır- (in külsır-) all form Inchoative V.s; see the Den. Suff. -ğır/-ğer-.
(ar-)/er/-ur/-ür-, attached only to consonants, the first two very rare, the second two fairly common, form Caus. V.s, see Kaş. II 87, 199.
-dur-/dür-/tur-/tür-, attached only to consonants, the commonest Suff. for forming Caus. V.s; see Kaş. I 20; II 197.
-ğur/-ğer- attached only to a limited range of consonants, forms Caus. V.s; see Kaş. II 198; rather rare.
-şur/-şur- (occasionally in the Sec. f. -çur-/çur-) is not a primary Suff. but a combination of -ş- and -ur-, the preceding vowel often being elided, e.g. tap-, tapış-, tapşur-.
-ş- (only after vowels)/-ış/-iş/-üş/-üş- forms Co-operative and Reciprocal V.s which, according to Kaş., meant ‘to do (something) together (with a Plur. Subject); to do (something) in every part (with a Sing. Subject); to do (something) to one another (with a Plur. Subject); to help (someone Dat.) to do (something Acc.); to compete with (birle; someone) in doing (something Acc.). N. See Kaş. I 20; II 113 ff., 225; common.
-üz-/üş- (dominant, e.g. tüte:--, tütüz-)/düz-/düz-/ğüz-/güz- form Caus. V.s; obviously cognate to -ur-, etc. (cf. -siz, -sira:--); acc. to Kaş. II 87 -düz- was an Oğuz Suff.; see also II 164; all rare in the early period; became commoner, and in some languages almost standard, in the later period.

ENDINGS

-ğa/-ge, which was a rare and obsolescent Dev. N. suffix, also appears at the end of a larger number of words which cannot be so explained. Some are pretty certainly not l.-w.s, others, like sirıçğa: ‘crystal, glass’ prob. are. The list includes one, perhaps significant, pair. avıçğa: ‘old man’, kurtğa: ‘old woman’, and several names of animals and insects çekürge; (PU) çınçırğa:, torığa:, kumursğa:, karga:, karınçğa:, kaşğa:, sariçğa:, etc.
-vaç/-waç in sanduwaç, yala:vaç is the Iranian word (and Suff.) vaç ‘voice’.
-diç occurs in tardiç, savdiç, sağdiç.
-la:ç/-liç in ıkla:ç, iqliç, todlıç, karğila:ç, sokarlaç, sondila:ç, three of them names of birds, is prob., but not demonstrably, foreign.
-ğa:n/-ğe:n (also Den. and Dev. Suffs.)/-ka:n/-ke:n occurs at the end of several names of animals: tavişğa:n (a very old word), tayğa:n, sicğa:n, sağıszğa:n, sıklıran, etc., and of plants: çibıkıa:n, tuturka:n, kara:kan, kövürgen, etc.
-la:n occurs at the end of the names of several animals arsla:n, bakla:n, bula:n, bursla:n, kapla:n, kula:n, sırtla:n ('hyaena', first noted in the medieval period), yıla:n, and one title çoğla:n.
-va:r in çığılva:r, yala:var is an Iranian Suff. meaning 'carrying'.
-z occurs at the end of three numerals: ottuz, tokkuz, sekkiz; several names of parts of the human or animal body: ağız, boğuz, büñuz, tız, köküz, köz; and several names of animals and insects: uyaz, toşuz, kunduz, etc., as well as miscellaneous words like yıltız and yultuz. None of these are likely to be l.-w.s.
a: Exclamation, usually vocative in character, occasionally expressing surprise, in the early period usually affixed to the word qualified, later, perhaps under foreign influence, placed before it. The attachment of -af-e metri gratia at the end of lines in KB and other poems is a Pe. trick, and perhaps not native Turkish. S.i.a.m.i.g., but also in contiguous non-Turkish languages. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. tūzțin oğlum-a 'my good son' U III 35, 26; anaçim-a 'my dear mother' U III 9, 2 (ii); baxṣi-a 'my teacher' U IV 28, 4; a.o.o.: Xak. xi 1 a: an exclamation (harf) of surprise (al-tahavyur); hence one says ol meni: a: kuuli: 'he surprised me' Kaš. PU 2F 3 1: Hap. leg.; like many names of fabrics prob. a l.-w., perhaps Chinese; apparently vocalized ay; if 1: or l: perhaps some Chinese word like i 'variegated, rainbow-coloured (clothing)' (Giles 5,434). Xak. xi 1: 'orange-coloured brocade' (dibâc nərânciyü'l-lawn) Kaš. I 40.

PU 1 0: Hap. leg.; the word, no doubt hamza wañ was inadvertently omitted in the MS. and replaced in the margin by o:xâ: presumably taken from the example; it is not clear whether this word is an abbreviation of oğ, which appears as below and elsewhere in the medieval period, or whether the latter is an expanded form, prob. the latter. Xak. xi 1 0: al-kafil, 'surety, security, pledge'; one says men an: o:xâ: aldîm 'I took him as security' (haffalu bihi) Kaš. I 40; (xiv Muh. PU 2 0: Hap. leg.; originally hamza wañ, but later a fatha was placed over the hamza and an alif added in both places. Xak. 0: 'an exclamation (harf) in reply to a caller'. When ya Muhammad is called out, the man who answers says 0: meaning 'what are your orders?' Kaš. I 40 (see 2 u).

I u: 'sleep'; the Dev. V. is exceptionally uđi:-, which suggests that this word may originally have been *ud-, but that word is nowhere noted in this sense; not noted later than xi. PU 2 u: (bi-işbâ-'l-alif) Hap. leg.; in Kaş. şiha' normally means 'back-vowels', e.g. both 1-toz: and tuq: are so described to distinguish them from tōz: and tūq: if, as is common with 2 o: is intended, it might mean, as in San., ut o, since uq: is not a very likely sound for an exclamation; see 2 i.: Xak. xi u: 'an exclamation of refusal (harf inhâr) to obey an order' (Kaş. I. 40).

Mon. V. A-

Preliminary note. The only two basic verbs of this shape are u:- and ô:-; in various medieval and modern languages more such verbs appeared as the result of the elision of final consonants, e.g. e:-fi: (< 1er-) 'to be'.

u:- there are a few early occurrences of this verb as an ordinary finite verb meaning 'to be capable' and the like, but it is normally used as an Aux. verb following a verb in the Ger. f. -u:-ú: or less often -gal:/-geli:; meaning 'to be able'. Even in this sense the word is rare after xi except in the Neg. f. The Pres. Particip. uğan, however, used as a N./A. meaning 'God; Almighty' survived rather longer. The later history of the Neg. f. is discussed by Mal. in Usp., pp. 224-5. Briefly the Ger. suff. -u:-ú: and u:- coalesced to produce -uma/-üme- the 'Impossible' f. of the verb. This stage was reached in Osman. in the early medieval period, but later, probably as the result of a general tendency to 'round round vowels, this became -ama/-eme-, producing such forms as Osm. sevemeye 'to be unable to love'. It has been suggested that in such forms the -a/-e- is a reduced form of al- which is used as an Aux. verb in the same sense in some modern languages, but this is improbable. It is more plausible that the Osm. Continuous Pres. Suff. -uyor (not subject to phonetic harmony) is a survival of the positive form of u:-. Türkı viii etińu: yaratınun: umaduk 'because they could not organize themselves (Hend.) Dis. ABA aba: 1 apa: ebe: epe: words of this form, connoting various terps of relationship abound in modern Turkish languages with meanings as various as (1) ‘ancestor’; (2) ‘grandfather’; (3) ‘grandmother’; (4) ‘father’; (5) ‘mother’; (6) ‘paternal uncle’; (7) ‘paternal aunt’; (8) ‘elder brother’; (9) ‘elder sister’; (10) (presumably metaphor.) ‘midwife’. Some, e.g. aba: ‘paternal uncle’, an abbreviation of Mong. abaga, and other words beginning ab ... etc. are certainly foreign; others, often occurring in only one language group, are of unknown origin. The only early forms seem to be Türkü, etc. apa: ‘ancestor’ and Oğuz ebe: ‘mother’. Kas. does not record the former, but it occurs in KB. In this early period it is often impossible to be sure whether the vowels are back or front and the consonant voiced or unvoiced; the following are the likeliest transcriptions. Türkü vi: iči: a: apm ‘my ancestors’ I E 1, II E 3; I E 13, II E 12; iči: miž apm: miž I E 19; Ongin 1; apa: also occurs as an element in P.N.s, possibly as a title, e.g. apa: tarxan T 34; this phr. occurs in Chinese refecs. to the Türkü and seems to be interpreted as ‘commander-in-chief’, see Liu Mau- tsai, Die chinesischen Nachrichten zur Geschichte der Ost-Türken, Tu-kiie, index, s.v. PU 2 apa: ‘bear’ (animal); ‘bear’ is normally 1 adığ, but there is a good deal of folklore, mixed up with an ancestor-cult, about bears in Siberia, and this word is prob. merely 1 apa: used metaph.; survives in NE Kaç., Koib., Sag. R I 620 and Khak. a: ba, same meaning. Kip. oba:, etc. Preliminary note. There are three early words of this general form; the only one certainly Turkish is uva:: oba: ‘clan’ is Oğuz and may well be a l.-w., though not demonstrably so; PU opo: ‘white cosmetic’ is prob. a Chinese l.-w. Ova ‘plain’ is peculiar to Osm. and seems to be quite a modern word. Oba: ‘heap of stones, grave mound’ and the like, noted from Kom. xiv CCI onwards is a l.-w. fr. Mong. obo (Kow. 370, Haltod 78).

oba: name of a small social unit, possibly ‘clan’, but prob. even smaller, ‘extended family’ and the like; from this the word came to mean ‘the dwelling place of such a unit; small encampment or large tent’, and thence more generally ‘tent, hut’, and the like; survives in these latter senses in Osm., including Rep. Turkish and Anat. (SDD. 188, 141), and Ktm. (oba) only(?). Oğuz x oba al qabilia ‘clan’ (? an imprecise word) Kas. I 86: Çağ. xv ff. oba ‘the small tents (xaymahd) which nomads pitch and in which they reside, when they stop somewhere; and metaphor. the place where they stop." San. 58r. 22: Osm. xiv ff. Oba e.i.a.p., in xiv to xvi it seems to mean 'a small encampment,' in a xiv text an ev qawmi 'the family living in one tent' is more important than one man, and an Oba qawmi 'the families living in a small encampment' are more important than an ev qawmi; from xvi onwards it seems to mean 'a tent or hut,' particularly a large one occupied by more than one family. TTS I 533; II 713; III 530; IV 596.

PU evük- hitherto transcribed bük-; occurs only in Türkü viii ff. Yen. and O. Kir, ix ff. where it is very common. With one dubious exception the only known form is evükmedim in a standard formula in funerary inscriptions. It takes the Dat. and is used in contrast to ad-grîl ‘to be separated from’, e.g. (xanîmká): évükmedim kuyda: kuçunyüm: ad-grîlîm Mal. 8, 1–2, which must mean something like ‘I could not stay with my xan and realms; I have been separated from my wife in the men’s quarters’. The object of ad-grîl is nearly always a person, wife, son, etc., that of evük- more often an institution, ruler, realm, and the like. Radloff (R IV 1876) is prob. right in suggesting that it should be transcribed évük-; if so it can be taken as a Den. V. in -îk- (Intrans.) from ev meaning ‘to reside, stay’.

PU apam/apan 'if', used with the Conditional mood. The earlier form is fairly common in Uyğ., the later is not traceable after xiv. In the early period the *-sar form was not always strictly Conditional, and this word perhaps became superfluous and fell into disuse when its usage became more restricted; the word was sometimes used by itself and sometimes followed by birök. Von Le Coq in Tur'an, 1918, p. 457 stated, without giving a reference, that F. W. K. Müller described this word as an 'Aramaeo-Sogdian ideogram'; this is complete nonsense, apparently based on a misunderstanding of the Sogdian 'ideogram' 'P' and, sometimes followed by əy, which was formerly read əy. Uyğ. viii ff. Iç ‘the interior, or inside of (something)’; originally, and often still, in a concrete sense. The word early acquired a number of specific connotations, esp. in its derivatives: (1) ‘the interior of the human body’ (cf. içe:ğü); (2) ‘inner’, as opposed to outer, clothing (cf. içton); (3) ‘the interior of a household, esp. a royal household’ (cf. içre:ki); (4) secret, or mental processes, as opposed to physical. With the 3rd Pers. Suffix in the Dat., Abl., and Loc. it serves as a Postposition meaning ‘into, from within, within’. In a few phr., the older of which are listed as main entries, it has been fused with another word to form a compound word. S.i.a.m.l.; with some variations in final consonant. eçe: etc. Preliminary note. There are in some modern languages, esp. NE and SW XX Anat., a good many words of the form ACA which are terms of relationship or respect. Some are certainly Mong. loan-words, e.g. ece 'master' and various forms of eçe 'father', and others may be. The only certain old Turkish words of this form are eçe, éci, and éçü:

eçe: both this word and éke, q.v., seem to have meanings straddling the generations (see éçü), this word meaning both 'one's mother's younger sister' and 'one's own elder sister' and éke: both 'one's father's younger sister' and 'one's own elder sister'; this would explain why this word survives in residual form in NW and SW attached to tay (tağa:y, q.v.) to give the meaning 'maternal aunt' (Osm. teçye). As an independent word survives only (?) in SW xx Anat. ace, ece, eke, éci SDD 67, 503-5, 780 which all mean, inter alia, 'elder sister'. Xak. xi éce: syn. w. éke; that is al-uxut'ul-kubra 'elder sister'; the -ç- was changed from -k- as in Ar. cerm from cerm and cubmad from cubmad Kas. 1 86 (this phonology is absorbed; both words with initial g- (so marked in the text) are Pe. l.-w. and the sound change is normal in such cases): Çağ. eçe ('with ç-') зан-i mużinна 'anelderly woman' San. 32v. 4.

1 éci: as pointed out in K. Gronbech, 'The Turkish System of Kinship', in Studia Orientalia . . . Johannoi Pedersen dicata, Munksgaard, 1953, this word means 'a close male relative younger than one's father and older than oneself', i.e. both (junior) paternal uncle and 'elder brother'. It soon lost its first meaning, and in the medieval period was displaced almost everywhere by the synonymous Mong. l.-w. ağa (aka); it survives, however, in SW xx Anat. in forms like those quoted under eçe. Türkçe viii eşem xağan olurdu: 'my (junior) paternal uncle ascended the throne' I 6 15, i.e. a.o. in this sense; inli:li: eşil: li: kikşuúritekin üçtin 'because (the Chinese) aroused mutual enmity between younger brothers (and nephews) and elder brothers (and uncles)' I 6 6, I 6 6; a.o.o. of eşil: in in position: viii ff. aqçu: (aquç-): originally 'to be bitter' in a physical sense, later also 'to be sour'; at a very early date developed several metaphor. meanings, the commonest (of a disease, etc.) 'to be painful', hence (of a person) 'to feel pain', and hence 'to feel the pain of others, to feel compassion'; in most languages the original physical meaning is lost; Sami, 22, says that in Osm. ãгрн-connotes deep-seated pain, асн-superficial, but more acute and lasting pain, and асн-intermittent muscular or nervous pain. F ağun the Sogdian word 'zun (ağün) 'life, living being', and the like, used as a Buddhist technical term to mean 'state of existence; one of a series of lives in the process of birth, death, re-inciparnation'; was also used as a l.-w. with the same meaning in Turkish Bud. and Man. texts. On the adoption of Islam it came to be used as a translation of Ar. al-dunya 'this world', as opposed to al-âxira 'the next world', when dunya was not itself used as a l.-w. Survived in Çağ. until about xv and, although not traceable in Old Osm., has recently been adopted in Rep. D. AÇIĞI - Preliminary note. In the early period the Refl. f. of a ç- and aç- would have been homophonous, and it is difficult to decide which form the early occurrences represent, but on balance they all seem to represent the former. If so the earliest occurrence of the latter is in a side-note (prob. in a SW hand) to Kip. XV ta'allama 'to feel pain' awurun-(for ağrin-) Tuh. 9b. 4 with açın- in the margin. On the other hand, at the present day the only survival of the Refl. f. of a ç- seems to be NE Sag., Sor adın- (sic) 'to open the mouth'; açın- (with a wide range of phonetic variations) 'to feel pain, grief, anger, or compassion; to grudge; to be pitted', etc., which s.t.a.m.l.g. is clearly the Refl. f. of açın-.

uḍ, etc. Preliminary note. There are seven basic words in this group of which the original pronunciations can be firmly fixed as uḍ, otḍ, ot, öḍ, őḍ, öt, and uđ̣, which are not easy to keep apart since in the early period -ḍ was pronounced -ṭ. There may also at one time have been a second -uḍ 'sleep', see I u: In some medieval languages uvut has become utfuḍ and uĝut uṭ.

uḍ 'bovine, ox', without reference to sex, not 'bull', which was oğûḳ or buḳa, nor 'cow', which was inêḳ; almost syn. w. sig̣ir. It early became the word for 'ox' in the twelve-annual cycle, and lingered on in this meaning in the west long after it had become obsolete as a common noun. The entries in some Osm. dicts., Sami 208 (ot), Red. 242 (oḍ), 249 (oż), 255 (ot) are muddled reminiscences of this. Survives as uy, a common noun, in some NE, SE, and NC languages. Sporadic spellings with -ḍ are errors. See Doerfer II 584. Uyg. viii ff. Man. êt- (èt-) has a long semantic history; it originally meant 'to organize, put in order' (a meaning surviving only?) in NE Tuv. Pal. 576), then 'to ornament, adorn' (cf. etl), then 'to create' (as part of an organized plan), then by a gradual process of attenuation simply 'to make', and finally 'to do'. This attenuation occurred chiefly in the Western languages; the Eastern languages, perhaps for the colourfull reason given by Kaş, rather avoided the word and continued to use kil- for 'to make, do,' S.i.a.m.l.g., nearly always for 'to make, do', but in most languages used chiefly to form compound verbs out of foreign, esp. Ar. nouns. The consonant of this verb, unlike that of at-, is -d- before vowels in the SW (Oğuz) languages and this no doubt represents the earliest form. The intervocalic -d- in the NE languages is not significant as it occurs universally. Türkü vii the word is common (over a dozen occurrences) usually in the phr. bodun êt- 'to organize a people' (group of clans or tribes) into a realm (èt), often with an implication of conquering them first; e.g. Sügdak bodun eteyin teyín 'saying I will organize the Sogdian people’. (I crossed the Pearl River) I E 39; another phr.
is çerig ét- 'to marshal troops in battle order'; e.g. śuṣpuš bolsar çerig ét eterti: 'when there was going to be a battle, he used to marshal the troops' IX. 9; the later meaning perhaps occurs in bark ētūq: beleg yaragamna bitig taş etūqči 'ornamenting the grave goods, having the painted decoration carried out, and ornamenting the memorial stone' I N 13; also occurs in the Hend. ét- yarat-; e.g. Az bodun étip yaratip 'organizing the Az people' I E 19; the proper name or title Éi etmish 'having organized a realm' first occurs in Ōgin 4: VIII ff. éligi etmish men Irkb. 48; Man. biz adraccum adruck étip étip yaratip nomka kiğırüşçİ törō bar ereti 'there was a rule that we should organize (Hend.) various things and introduce them into the doctrine' Churas. 228-9 (exact meaning obscure): Uyğ. 1 öt- the basic connotation is movement through or over; it is both Trans. and Intrans., in the latter case almost always with 'time of some sort as the Subject. If Trans. it can govern several cases, with different shades of meaning; with the Acc. it usually means 'to cross', e.g. a river, the movement being over rather than through; with the Dat. it means 'to penetrate into (something)'; and with the Abl. (and/or Loc.) 'to pass right through (something)' and come out the other side. There are various metaphor meanings, e.g. 'to pass over, forgive (sins, etc., Abl.)'; 'to give up, renounce (something)'; and, if Intrans., (of the bowels) 'to be purged'; (of goods) 'to move freely, be easily marketed'.

E ’ud: a word read in Kaş. I 110, 10, and translated ‘trouble, distress’ by Brockelmann with a query and by Atalay without one. It occurs in a verse, Kaş.’s translation of which is too free to help, spoken by a man in a lovers’ quarrel, aye: senîq ’ud:; emegê telim ’ud: (or i’dûj); yumsar katîq ’ud:; köklüm sapa: yûgrûk. The first ’ud: is the Gerund of ’ud- and the second is E ’ud: ‘sand-dune’. The word after telim might be the Gerund of ’ud- used in a slightly different meaning as a Postposition meaning 'after', or it might be the Gerund of xid- although that verb has no obviously appropriate meaning. In any event it cannot be a noun. It must mean something like 'He said, 'I went after you, and after? many sufferings, the hard sand-bank softened, and my heart hastened to you'.'

1 iđi: properly 'master, owner', but in Moslem texts often the 'Lord' (God). The phonetic history of this word is exceptionally complicated. The original form must have been idli, but the syn. word ige/iyej-u-e is so old that its independent existence cannot be completely excluded. It seems, however, more probable that this is merely a Sec. i. with an unusual vocal change in the final. The position is complicated by the existence of a syn. Mong. word eće(n) which is as old as the xii th SH (Haenisch 42), and looks like a Turkish loanword. iđi: could have become ici in Mong., but ige/yeye could hardly have become eće, so if the two words are identical the word must have been borrowed before the vocal change took place and later altered to conform with it. It survives in a wide range of Sec. f.s, which are not always easy to identify.—NE: eće: R I 657; 1: 1407; le 1411; Khk. e: Bas. 334; Tuv. e: Pal. 591; SE: Tar. ige R I 604; Türki ige Shaw: ige DS; ige Tarring: NC Kir. e: ige Kız. ige MM, Smmt.: SC Üzb. e: ige NW Kaz. ige R I 1443, 1578; Kk., Kogay ige; Kum. ige: SW Az. ige; Osm. is; Tkm. ige; xx Anat. ige, ey, ez. iđi: has sometimes been mistaken for 2 iđi: the existence of which was at first real. D attaːnçiz Kap. leg.; a dubious word which occurs as a v.l. of alkaːnçiz in Uğyg. viii ff. Bud. TT VI 362, and is prob. only a scribal error for that word.
D atkanğı: N./A.S. fr. atkan-; 'attachment (to this world)'; practically syn. w. atkağ. N.o.a.b. Uyg. VIII ff. Bud. altı kaçınlının altı atkanğıların ezükün ılgınlık 'the deceitfulness and falseness of the six objects of sensual perception and the six attachments (to this world)" Swv. 371, 7 ff.; o.o. U II 10, 19, and 26 (mis-spelt and mistranslated); TT VI 180 (v.l.).

D atkanğıluksuz Priv. N./A. fr. an A.N. of atkanğı; N.o.a.b. Uyg. VIII ff. Bud. atkanğıluksuz yokug bildiler uktular 'they knew and understood the nothingness (San skrit sunyatá) which is free from attachment (to this world)" TT VI 402 (and see note thereon); a.o. Swv. 60, 8 (I bord).

D odğurati: Adverb in -tt-; as this Suff. is attached only to N./A.s, the word is presumably der. fr. odğurak, q.v.; the connotation is that the intellect is aroused, so that the conscious action of the mind etc. is stimulated; the best translation is therefore 'rousingly, vividly'. Hitherto transcribed uğuratı and translated 'completely', but neither form nor meaning are etymologically justified. N.o.a.b. Uyg. VIII ff. Man. (damaged passage) odğurati belgii[lüg] körtgüri bérdi 'he demonstrated... so that it became vividly manifest' M III 26, 11 (i): Bud. D adğrak Dim. f. of adğur; properly 'a young stallion'. Survives in NE Alt., Leb. ayağrak R I 16, 17; Bar. ayağrak do. 17; NC Kür. ayağrak do. 16, in this meaning. Kao's meaning is otherwise unknown. Xak. XI ayağrak al-a'sam min'al-wisâl, wa huwa bi-manzîlati'l-kabîl l-lijîyâh 'the white-footed antelope'; it is in the same relation (to the doc as the ram to the nannugat Kao. I 144.

D odğurak N./A.S. fr. odğur-, sometimes used as an Adv., cf. odğurati, q.v.; the two words appear as alternative readings in the MSS. of TT VI. Basically the meaning must be 'rousing or the like; applied both to human actions (preaching, etc.) and human sensations (perception, feeling, etc.), in the latter case perhaps best translated 'vividly, convincingly', or the like. Pec. to Uyg. Hitherto transcribed uğurak, or more recently odğurak, and translated 'completely', but these seem to be errors. Uyg. VIII ff. Man. (thus long and continuously you have wrought great benefits; by virtue of your good deeds) odğurak burxan [kutun bułutupu?] 'you have convincingly [attained the blessed status of?] Prophet' TT III 105: Bud. (then after reflection) odğurak tyydum 'I vividly perceived' U II 5, and 4, etc. (tuy-); (my dear son hear) menip odğurak sözlemiş savimin 'my rousing words' U III 82, 11-12; o.o. U I 34, 18; U III 80, 25; Tiğ. 50b. 6 (see note); TT VI 279 (see note for o.o.); Hüen-ts. 318; 2084: Civ. odğurak (spelt oğurak) çiwa:gün şor ya:ğlağ kurug a:şlar 'startlingly acid, salt, oily, and dry foods' TT VIII I.19.

D adğrılik A.N. (Conc. N.) fr. adğur. S.i.a.m.l.g., except? NW usually as ayyırık meaning 'the behaviour of a stallion'. Türkü VIII ff. (the beg visited his horses; his white mare had just foaled) altum tuya:ğlu:ğ adğırlık yara:ğay 'the golden-hoofed stud will flourish' IrkB 5.

D edle- Den. V. fr. edj; in the early period 'to turn (something Acc.) into something useful', hence, e.g. 'to cultivate (a garden, etc.)', and also 'to deem (something Acc.) to be useful', hence 'to esteem (someone)'. Later it came to mean simply 'to make, create', and finally, like et-; it came to be little more than an Aux. V., used to form compound V.s w. N.s, usually foreign. In this sense it seems to have been regarded as more graceful than et-: Survives as eyle- in SE Türkü, Shaw 37, 89, 98; Ötrıv (atl) (also in its earlier sense) NW Kaz., SW Osm., Tkm. Uyg. viii ff. etmek/őtmek the oldest of three similar words for 'bread', the others being epmek, q.v., and ekmek, noted in NC, NW, and SW and prob. a recent Sec. f. due to a supposed connection with ek-. Őtmek seems to be the earlier of the two forms. Although -mek is normally an Infinitive Sufi, it is not possible to connect the word semantically with any verb, and it should be noted that Kaj. in his main entry spells it with -mek, not -mek. Survives with initial ő- (occasionally ō-) in some NE languages, R I 1275, 1868, and NW Kar. Tu, and with initial e- or i- (lê-) in other NE languages, NC, NW, and SW. Uyğ. viii ff. E etin This word is read in M III 45, 5 (i) in a description of paradise; ‘...the barking of dogs, the call of birds’, all confusing tiresome evil noises are not heard in the land; korkunç etin olar ara yok’. Henning in Asia Major VII 122 suggested as an alternative litin ‘pushing’; but the obvious amendment is üin, almost the same outline in Uyğ. script. The passage then means ‘there are no terrifying sounds among them’.

N.s. fr. *öten-(öden)-, Refl. f. of öten-, which survives only in SW Az., Osm. öden-, and ötuńç resembles that between ötek and 2 ötuğ. Only the first exists in Kaş and the vocalization of the second syllable there is uncertain; in the first occurrence the vowel sign might be either fatha or damma, in the second it is missing, and in the third definitely damma; but in any event by the medieval period the word had definitely become ötuńç; it survives in SW Az. ödenis; Osm. Tkm. ödünç. The second, after its appearance in Türkü, is not noted until its reappearance in SC Uzb. ötuńç: NW Kaş. ötuńç R I 1864; Kk. ötuńç; SW Tkm. ötuńç all meaning 'request' and the like.

D adaş/adaš N. of Assn. fr. I at (adv). Abbüldakir İnan in Türk Dili, Belleten 3rd Series, No 1, pp. 41 ff. argued that the original meaning was 'friend, comrade', and that 'namesake' was a later, secondary meaning. This is etymologically impossible, but the meaning 'comrade' is so prevalent in the early period as to suggest that in this context ata meant 'clan (rather than personal) name', so that adaş meant primarily 'fellow clansman'; cf. kadas. 1 ok 'arrow'. Owing to the use of arrows for various ritual and ceremonial purposes it came to be used at a very early date in the sense of 'sub-tribe' (and as such forms part of such tribal names as 66 ok) and also of 'a lot' in casting lots. Ok: (so spelt) 'a share of an inheritance', noted in Kağ. is, no doubt, another special sense of this word. Later it came, like ik, to mean 'a long piece of wood', usually round in section, like an axle, rolling-pin, and the like, and so tended to be confused with uğ. S.i.a.m.1. See Doerfer II 605-6. S ağıt- See ağıtarl-

D ağıt- Refl. f. of ağıt- N.o.a.b. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. Sanskrit yānam ārūhya 'having mounted a chariot' köllökke: ağıt: TT VIII A.37; (in order that the flames of hell may not rise to meet me) örtül: yelirde taki ağıtmazkan 'and in order that I may not be made to climb into fiery places' U II 78, 42–3; a.o. Swt. 601, 23.

ağıtar-faktar- apparently both Intrans. 'to turn, or roll, over' (rare) and Trans. 'to turn, or roll, (something Acc.) over', with some extended meanings like 'to translate' (a book etc. Acc.) from (one language Abl.) into (another -ca:ç-); more or less syn. with evir-, esp. in the last meaning. The second syllable, always -tar-, excludes the possibility that this is a Caus. f. Also partly syn. with ağna-; but unlikely to be connected with it etymologically. As regards the velar, Kaş. is prob. right in saying that ağıtar- was the original form, though he habitually uses axtar-, see his remarks on sığıt; the Uyg.
script is too ambiguous to make the Uygūr form certain. S.t.a.m.l.g., sometimes much distorted, e.g. NE aŋdar/-aŋnar/-aŋnar; NC, NW aŋdwar- as well as more formal forms, aŋkar/-aŋtar- in the same groups. Uyg. viii ff. oğul 'offspring, child', originally of either sex, but with a strong implication of 'male child': by itself it can mean 'son', but not 'daughter'; in the Plur. it might mean 'sons and daughters', but oğul kiz would be the more normal expression. One of the very few Turkish words forming a Plur. in -n. Thus oğlan was originally the Plur. and understood as such, but this fact was later forgotten and oğul came to mean 'son', and oğlan 'boy' and later 'servant' or 'bodyguard' (the origin of German Uhlans); the timing of these changes has not yet been worked out. Both words s.i.a.m.l. with various phonetic changes. See Doerfer II 498, 502. S 2 ağlâ- See ağlâ:-.

DF akla:- Den. V. fr. 2 ak, q.v. N.o.a.b. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. (my father and mother loved (sever) my elder brother the prince and mënî aklâyur erti 'hated me' PP 29, 1: Civ. (his mouth gets dry; when he drinks water he is not satisfied) aṣâq aklâr 'he hates (the sight of) food' TT VIII 1.2.

D ağlâ:- Den. V. fr. *iğ; 'to weep'. The phonetic history of this verb is very similar to that of iğ, q.v.; the original form was certainly iğlâ:-, but a form with prothetic ye-evolved in Uyğ. and was an alternative form in Xak. S.i.a.m.l.g. usually as iğlâ-, yîglâ- or a Sec. or metathesized form of one of them, but in NE there are some forms with initial or rounded vowels and the SW form ağlâ:- (Tkm. aqlâ-) probably emerged as early as xiv. Uyğ. viii ff. Man. ot suv kütî iğlâyur 'the majesty of fire and water weeps' M II 12, 4: Bud. iğlâmîm PP 5, 6; iğlâyû 4, 1 and 7; 5, 2, 10, 6; iğlâyû (sic?) 10, 5; yaşi tölûkî iğlâyur 'weeping with streaming tears' Uşp. 106, 47; iğlâyû si[tayu] 'weeping and sobbing' U III 17, 3; bârîn yatîp iğlâyû yâlvara 'lying on their bellies weeping and pleading' TT IV 4, 13; yaşîl gözîn iğlâyû 'weeping with tear-filled eyes' TT X 297; Xak. xi iğlân iğlâyî: 'the boy wept (bákî); alternative form (luq'a) of iğlâyî: Kâ. 1 286 (iğlær, iğlâmîk); oğlân iğlâyî: same translation III 309 (iğlær, iğlâmîk; verse); five o.o. of iğlâyî: Kâ. 1 1121, 1140; oğlâyî: xiv Rbğ. iğlân- (2ic, unvocalized) R I 177; Muh. VUD ihlâ:- Hap. leg.; the olif is unvocalized, but it seems reasonable to suppose that this is a Den. V. fr. *iñ, an alternative form of ik, q.v., same meaning. Xak. xi (in a note on exclamations ending in 'quiescent há' radical (al-âşî) há is not found in the pure (samîm) Turkish language except in the expression er ihlädî: axadâ'l-raca'l-rabw 'the man was seized with hiccoughs', in which this (ih) is an onomatopoeic for the sound which rises from the chest (and also in the word ühi: 'owl'), q.v.) Kâ. 111 118, 21; n.m.e.

VÜS ığlût- Hap. leg.; the spelling is certain, since it lies between ığlašt- and avlašt-, but the meaning is identical with that of avlêt-, q.v., and this must be either a dialect form or one of Kaş.'s rare mistakes’. Xak. xi ol tawarrüm (sic) ığlûtı: kâtârâ mâlaha va cémamara ‘he increased (Hend.) his property’ Kaş. I 265 (ığlûtür, ığlumak).

Dis. AĞN

1 âğan Hap. leg.; the para. concerned is most obscure; Thomsen translated the word 'penance' as a pure guess, suggesting a connection with âgan- in U II 87, 62; this is a simple misreading of âguan-, which could be a Den. V. fr. this word; if so, it might mean 'prostration' or the like; Orkun's translation 'seclusion', based on a supposed connection with 1 âglâ:- is morphologically improbable. Türkü VIII ff. ak at karış:in üç boluğa: talu:lapan âgâkâ: ûtû:ge: ıqâmlâ: 'a white horse choosing his adversary in the three states of existence(?!) sent him to prostration(?) and prayer(?)' İrk B 19.

F akur ‘stable’; early l.-w. fr. Pe. axurur. S.i.s.m.l. in various forms, sometimes recognized as a l.-w. and sometimes not; in modern times usually means ‘manger’ rather than ‘stable’. See sip. Xak. xi (in the introductory Chap.) akur al-içhâl ‘stable’ Kaş 1, 7, 7; n.m.e.: KB akur ‘stable’ 5369, 5379: xiv Muh. al-milâf ‘manger’ axurur/axur Mel. 76, 8; axur Rsf. 179.

?F iğar n.o.a.b. v. G. ATG, p. 309 suggests that this is Sogdian yyr and prob. means ‘strong’. Türkü vii iğar ‘eliğde: iğar xâganlıgda: yeg kîltm ‘I made them better than those who had a strong (?) realm and a strong (?) xâgân’ E 29, H 24; iğar iğar- iğar- ‘among your strong (?) sons’ I SE.

VU F iğar pec. to Kaş. In spite of the difference in vocalization it seems likely that this is an Ar. l.-w., perhaps received through Pe. where it is also a l.-w. Xak. xi iğar al-farasul-iğar ‘a horse with a white blaze on its forehead’; this word agrees with the Ar. in sound and meaning except that in Ar. the alif carries a fatha and in Turkish a dama Kaş 1, 53; a.o. I 335 (bol).

VU oğur Hap. leg. Although this is described as Oğuz, the A.N. ogurluk, q.v., appears in a Xak. verse. It is entered between the Xak. and Oğuz translations of uğur and is possibly a special meaning of that word, but there is no obvious semantic connection. Oğuz xi oğur al-iñad ‘exchange’, one says atka: oğur aldim ‘I received (something) in exchange for the horse’ Kaş 1, 53.

uğur semantically rather indefinite; seems to connote both ‘time’ and ‘cause’; in some contexts it is hard to say which is uppermost. ‘Time’ seems to have evolved into ‘the right time, an auspicious time’, and thence into ‘good fortune’ the meaning uppermost today in the word and its der. f.s. Very common in the early period, but survives only (?) in SW Az., Osm., Tkm. (and Krm R 1 1010). Has been fairly consistently transcribed oğur, but TT VIII has uğur and this is the modern pronunciation. See Doerfer II 604. Uyğ. viii ff. Chr. ol uğurka ‘for that reason’ (the Magi still worship fire) U I 9, 3: Man.-A (after a list of names) el(lentik) erkkentik uğurinti ‘at the time, when (the persons named) were ruling and exercising authority’ M I 27, 10: Man. az nizvani uğrinta ‘because of the passion of lust’ TT II 16, 20: Bud. Kır. ix ff. elım uğrinta ‘for the sake of (?) my realm’ Mal. 10, 8 (a chaotic inscription, but these words seem clear): Xak. xi uğur al-uqat ‘time’; one says ne: uğurda: keldin ‘at what time did you come?’; uğur al-daâlå (here) ‘reign’; hence one says beğ uğrinta: meniç içim ettili: salaha amri fi daâlât-l’amir ‘my affairs were kept in good order in the reign of the beg’; uğur al-imkân wa’l-furça fi’il-say ‘possibility, opportunity for something’; hence one says bu: tt uğurluğ boli: sàra hâdâl-l-amir fi imkânîhi wa furçatihi ‘this affair became possible and opportune’ Kaş 1, 53 (paras. on uğur and uğur in Oğuz follow); and about 20 o.o. meaning ‘time, occasion, the right time’ (uqat or zamâin): KB (a prudent man) iğ ugrin blîr ‘knows the right time to work’ 2192: xiii (?) akru: ‘gently, quietly’, and the like; often doubled. From the earliest period a longer form akuru: occurs and fr. xi forms with -n attached. None of the morphological analyses of this word which have been suggested, e.g. in Brockelmann, para. 104, are plausible, and it seems to be a basic word, the form with attached -n being perhaps an Instr. S.i.m.m.l. usually with attached -n and sometimes meta- thesized as in SW. Uyğ. vii ff. Bud. akuru akuru maqnu maqnu ‘she walks at a quiet pace’ U II 24, 2; a.o. Uğra:- Den. V. fr. uğrur, and like it semantically rather indefinite. In Uyğ. it is nearly always constructed with a Ger. in -gali/gelli; and means 'to intend to (do something)', occasionally with the Dat. with the same meaning; the Ger. uğra:yu however seems to mean 'especially, particularly' (see discussion and further examples in TT V, p. 33, note B86). In Xak. it usually takes the Dat. and means 'to go purposefully (to someone or to do something)'. In Rbg., as well as the earlier usages, the meaning 'to meet (someone Dat.)' first appears; this is the normal modern meaning. Survives in SE Türkî Shaw 11; NE Kar. Krim R I 1018 and SW Osm., Tkm. D ağrçak 'spindle whorl'; later used for other objects of similar shape like 'millstone', 'the knob on the top of a tent', and the like. In spite of the great variety of spellings, there can be little doubt that this is a Conc. N. fr. ağur; although the alternation c/s is well established for the Suff. -cın/-sın it is otherwise unknown for -çak; this is more prob. than the alternative possibility that it is a Dim. f., although that form is rather more common. PUD uğrşga 'backbone'. Almost the only stable object of this word in modern languages are the meaning, the initial o- and the -r-. The last syllable varies between -ga and -ka (in the Uyg. text it might be either) but -ga is more probable. If so, it might be a Dev. N. fr. oğur-, bearing the same relation morphologically to uğrğ as, say, bilğe: to bilğ. This is the likeliest explanation; but the only early occurrence of the word is in a late Bud. Tantric text, possibly xiii or xiv, and it might be a Turkish l.-w. in Mong. (oğruğ would be the form assumed by oğruğ in Mong., cf. uğurka for ukrurk) re-borrowed in the Mong. form; there does not, however, appear to be any trace of such a Mong. word. S.i.a.m.l.g. in a wide variety of forms; in some -m-, -n-, -g, or zero take the place of the first -ğ- and in others a -t- is inserted after the -r-, producing such forms as NC Kir. ommurta, Kax. ommurta, and SW Az. onurg, Osm. onurğ, Tkm. oprug. Mon. AL al Preliminary note. There were certainly two ancient words spelt al. It is doubtful whether there was a third, probably al if genuine; see below.

1 aI: 'device, method of doing something', originally quite neutral and used for honourable as well as dishonest devices and methods; later it became derogatory only and meant specifically 'deceit, guile, dirty trick'. In the early period usually used in the Hend. al çeviş or al altağ. Became a l.-w. in Pe.; survives only (?) in SW Osm. al; Tkm. al. Xiv Osm. lexicographers regarded it as foreign, Red. 170 describing it as Pe. and Sami 47 as a corruption of Ar. hila, 'better not used'. See Doerfer II 516. 2 aI: ‘scarlet’; a l.-w. in Mong. (Kow. 71; Halto 16) for the colour of the (Chinese) scarlet ink with which the rulers sealed documents; also borrowed in Russian as alI, same meaning. S.i.m.m.; in SW Tkm. aI. Cf. kizI. See Doerfer II 517. Türkü viii ff. Man. al [gap] keɗip ‘putting on a scarlet (robe)’ TT II 8, 67-8; Uyg. viii ff. Bud. 3 al if really an ancient word, meant 'front, facing, prior position' but there is great doubt whether it was. In the early period it occurs only with a 3rd Person Poss. Suff. in the Dat., Abl. and Loc. and these words might equally well be the same cases of alını, q.v. The earliest authorities for the existence of al as such are Vel. and San., but in Çağ, too, the word is attested only in suffixed oblique cases; it is possible that by this period a word al had been formed by a kind of false etymology fr. oblique cases of alını. It certainly seems to exist in many modern languages, but is still, except in Kaz., apparently used only in oblique cases. Such words are SE Türkî ayl BŞ 10; Jarr ing 16; NC Kır, Kex. alda, aldan, alâga and similar forms in NW Kaz.; in NE the situation is complicated by the fact that alını when carrying suffixes would become altı. There is a parallel problem in the question whether there was an ancient word alt or whether this, too, is a back formation fr. altını, q.v., and there is a good deal of confusion between the modern forms of these two groups of words. The following is the relevant evidence regarding this word. Uyğ. viii ff. Man. (in a fragmentary text apparently containing a simile about a fish) [şuyu] ködî suv ılyı barsar ol suvun adaki [gap]dağ bolsar ulûg kumka turşuv suv kum alıpa [?]lîn- ser 'if (the fish) goes downstream along the water, and the end of the watercourse is blocked(?) and stops at a great sand dune, and if the water soaks into the front of the sand dune' (the fish is left high and dry) M III 37, 1-5 (ii): Civ. TT I 129-30 is read beg tamgâsi elçîde ornağı orun anıpsa 'a beg's seal is in your hand, and a firm seat...'; the last word is meaningless and the editors suggest an emendment to alıpsa: (Xak.) xiii(?) Tcf. (do not punish me) bu kâfiirî alında 'in the presence of these infidels' Çağ. xv fl. alınsa/galıysa önünde 'in the presence of, before' Vel. 27 (quotns. containing alıysa and alınım); alı on ve yan 'front, side' do. 27 (quotns. containing anıpsa alıysa); al (1) hudâr 'presence' (Vel. 's first quotn.); (2) şıpımi 'headfront' (quotn. beginning Nawâl alını yazağanın 'that which is written on Nawâl’s forehead'; the word here is clearly alını): Xwar. xiii(?) bir köl arasında alınıdın bir iğâ kördî 'he saw a tree in front of him in the middle of a lake' Oğ. 71: Korn. xiv teñrî alında 'in the presence of God' and o.o. CCG; allindaki kaş 'the front saddle-bow' CCl; Gr. 35 (quotns.): Kip. xiv quddâm 'in front of' alında: Bul. 14, 4.

1 él the basic, original meaning was 'a political unit organized and ruled by an independent ruler'; the most convenient short term in English is 'realm'. In the early texts it usually occurs in association with other political terms, xağan the ruler of such a realm, boðun its people, törö: the unwritten customary law under which it was administered by the ruler, ulûg the geographical area which is occupied and öge: the chief administrative officer of the ruler. From Xak. onwards, bu: not apparently earlier, it developed some extended meanings. In particular it often seems to mean 'the community, the people of the realm', displacing boðun in this sense. As the Turks became involved in international politics it also began to have an international application and came to mean 'organized international relations' from which the translation to 'peace', one of its modern meanings, was an easy one. It is an open question whether 'courtyard', one of the meanings given by Kaş, belongs to this word, but it is prob. merely a metaphor. use meaning literally 'the realm of the owner of the house'. The phr. usually spelt él kün in two words, which is first noted in KB and seems to mean 'people', has given some trouble. The theory in Id. that kün here is 1 kün 'sun' is not at all plausible. The most reasonable explanation is that the second syllable is the Collective Suff. -gün and that the spelling should be elgün in one word. S.i.a.m.lg. as él/el/le meaning 'country, province; people, community (esp. one's own people as opposed to foreigners)' and, less often, 'peace'. See Doerfer II 653. ol both (1) an indeclinable Demonstrative Adj. ‘that’ as opposed to bu: ‘this’; (2) a declinable Demonstrative Pron. ‘that’, also used for the 3rd Pers. Pron. ‘he, she, it’. As a Pron. it was also used in the early period as the equivalent of the copula ‘is, are’. In this last case there are two usages: (a) subject (sometimes implied, not stated), predicate, ol, meaning that the subject is the same as, or has the quality described by, the predicate; (b) subject, ol, meaning that the subject ‘is that’, often followed by a subordinate clause as in such phr. as umīl ol ‘my hope is (that . . . )’. C.i.a.p.a.l; in most the form is still ol, but in al- 'to take', with all the shades of meaning of the English word, 'to seize, collect (a debt), receive, accept,' and some others as well, such as 'to take off' (a cap, saddle, etc.), 'to marry' and (as an abbreviation of satfın al-) 'to buy'. S.i.a.m.İ. The word is used in many idioms and compounds in which it is sometimes the second element. When it is the first it is expressed like alip bar- and alip kêt- 'to take away', and alip kel- 'to fetch', the two words are often fused and assume forms like appar-, ekkît-, akkel-. Jarring 18-19 lists about 30 phr. beginning with alıp (alip) in SE Türkî. In compounds in which al- is the second element the meaning largely depends on the form of the first verb. In modern NE and NC languages a Ger. in -p is followed alternatively by al- or bér-, e.g. satıp al- 'to buy', satıp bér- 'to sell'. In such cases Pal. says that al- in NE Tuv. connotes action taken in one's own interest or for oneself. But, if the first element is a Ger. in -a/-e, al- has the same meaning as uz- 'to be able'. In such expressions al-, like uz-, is usually, but not always, in the Neg. f.; phr. like kele almdî 'he could not come' are common, but phr. like kele aldt he was able to come' occur also. The date when this idiom evolved is uncertain. The earliest languages in which it is traceable are Kom. and Çağ., but no examples have been noted in Xwar., Kip., or any earlier language or in the SW languages. It has often been suggested, e.g. in R.I 348, that the SW Impossible f. barama- 'to be unable to go' is a contraction of bara al- but this is an error, the second element is uz-, q.v. In the basic meaning 'to take' the object is in the Acc., the source from which it is taken in the Abl., and the third-party beneficiary, if mentioned, in the Dat. Türkî viii al- is common, usually 'to capture (by military action)', e.g. (I killed their yağan and) élîn anta: altım 'thereupon took his realm' II E 27; but ol savûq alip 'accepting that statement (as true)' I S 7, II N 6; Türk[çe yağan] kızın ertî çı: ulûg törün oğlama: alî: bêrtîm 'I took the daughter of the Türçe yağan (in marriage) for my son with great honour' II N 10; a.o. 1-fîl- Preliminary note. There is some difficulty about the vocalization of these verbs. Kâş. I 169 says that there were two: (1) 1-îl, Aor. 1îur, with a back vowel 'to descend'; (2) 2-îl, Aor. 1îr, with a front vowel (of a thumb) 'to catch (a garment, etc.)'; but the former is spelt with a front vowel in KB and the Caus. f. 1îldrî- survives with front vowels in NG, and the latter with back vowels in Çağî; in the latter language however some meanings are so close to those of alî- as to suggest that 1î- here was a Sec. f. of alî-, just as in some languages there is a Sec. f. 1-kî- of akî-, q.v. There is in fact no doubt that the second verb did have a front vowel.

Mon. V. AL-

1- 'to descend (from something Abl.).' N.o.a.b. The suggestion in Kâş. I 169 that ânî-, q.v., is a Sec. f. of this verb is phonetically improbable. Xak. xî er taîgand kodî: ildî: 'the man descended (nasala) from the moun-

11- (1îlî-) 'to catch (something, with the hand, a hook, a noose, etc.),' and more commonly in modern languages to 'hang (something Acc., on something Dat.)' with some extended meanings esp. in SW. S.i.a.m.l.g.; with long vowel in Yakut Iîl- Pek. 912 and Tkm. Iîl- which may represent the original form. Uyç. viii ff. Man. bûdûmkâli îlgû tûbke sûrîmîşlîrkar 'to those attached to the cling-

D alčak "gentle, mild, humble" in a laudatory sense; survives in this meaning in NE Alt., Tel. R I 423: NC Kır.: NW Kaz. and SW Tkm., but in SW Osm. and Krım it has (recently?) acquired a pejorative meaning 'low (in stature or character), base, vile'. Prima facie a N./A.S. fr. alča-, but this verb is very poorly attested, occurring only in Osm. Red. 184, in a pejorative sense; the Pass. f. alčaliş is, however, better attested in recent Osm. dicts. In these circumstances it is possible that alča- is a back formation fr. alčak and that the latter is a Den. N. for an earlier *alčak der. fr. alt., but this depends on the question whether the latter, q.v., is an ancient word. See aşak. Xak. XI alčak al-halimîl-żarîf 'gentle, mild; graceful, polite' Kağ. alt as in the cases of 3 al and ast, there is grave doubt whether this is really an independent ancient word. If it was meant 'the bottom, or lower surface (of something)'. It has been suggested that altın, astın, which is synonymous with it, and üstün, which is often used in antithesis to it, all carry the suffix -dün/-dün/-tün/-tün, etc., which is clearly recognizable in words like öpdün and kédn, and that these are cases of *alttin, *asttin, *üsttin. This is probably correct, but it does involve assuming that alt and ast are in a class by themselves, and different from iç and tağ which are the bases of comparable forms içtın and tāstun but are also normal N./As, since they are used only in suffixed forms. If this is correct, then alçak, q.v., can also be regarded as a crisis of *altçak and derived from this word. The only medieval forms of this word, always in suffixed form, are in Tef. Kom. and Kp. In modern languages there is some confusion between alt and 3 al, but suffixless forms of alt meaning 'below' certainly occur in some NE, NW, and SW languages, and similar forms of ast with the same meaning in SE, NC, SC, and some NW languages. (Xak.) xiii ff. D ulyaŋ (ulyug) Den. N. fr. ul; 'the sole' (of a boot, etc.); the earliest form was perhaps ulyug (see ulyulug). S.i.a.m.l.g. as ultaŋ with minor phonetic variations, in SW Tkm. and xx Anat. Dildrûk prob. Pass. Dev. N. fr. lûdûr (litûr-); 'the plant rue, Peganum harmala'. Ilrûk is fully vocalized, but Dildrük in IIII 412 in a section containing dissyllables with first syllables ending in two consonants is completely unvocalized and in IIII 22, 22 the only vowel points are a ta§dîd and dâmma over the dāl, which is presumably an error for a casm over the dāl and a damma over the rā’. N.o.a.b.; SW xx Anat. ilezik ‘rue’ is more likely to be a corruption of yūze:rilık, q.v., than of this word. The situation is further complicated by the fact that in III 12 it is ildrük and not ilrük that is described as being in the language of Uç and Barsğan. Xak. xi ildrük al-harmal ‘rue’ Kaş. E öllü- 'to kill'. This word has been erroneously read in Türkü viii T 3. The photographs, which are clear, show that the actual word in the inscription is ötmüş, but there is a small crack in the stone between 8 and t which has been taken for an f. The text reads (you abandoned your xagan and surrendered (to the Chinese). Because you surrendered) tepri: ötmüş eriçiç 'Heaven, no doubt, abandoned you'.

D altar- Den. V. fr. 1 a;1; although I a;1 and altar-g, q.v., were originally neutral in meaning and only later became pejorative, alτα- always meant 'to deceive, trick, cheat (someone)', with a few extended meanings like 'to soothe (a child), to console' in some modern languages. S.i.a.m.l.g. See Doerfer II 523. Üyğ. viii ff. D ildur-, iltur- Preliminary note. The same inconsistencies of vocalization occur in these two verbs as occur in il- and il-, but there is no clear evidence of the vocalization of the first in KB and the Çağ. form of the second looks like a Sec. f. of altur-. The Infin. of the first is apparently spelt- -mack, later corrected to -mek in the MS. of Kaş.

D altur- Caus. f. of il-; to order (someone Acc.) to take (something Acc.' but in some modern languages 'to allow (something Acc.) to be taken from oneself'. S.i.a.m.l.g. The text contains a mix of German and Turkish, with some Latin and Arabic elements. The page seems to discuss historical and cultural references, possibly in the context of a linguistic or historical study. Without the ability to translate the specific terms and phrases, a precise summary is not possible. The page appears to be from a book or a scholarly work, given the formal and technical nature of the content.
D ultuplug Háp. leg.; P.N./A. fr. ultug (udája). Brahmi -t often represents -d-, and the word should perhaps be spelt. The Sanskrit word translated by this is unintelligible, but it presumably means 'possessing booth-soles'. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. ultupluglar TT VIII G.57.

aiç syn. w. aiçq, v.q.v., and perhaps a Sec. f. of it. In this meaning survives only(?) in SW xx Anat. aluk (of a man) 'bad' SDD 98. It is, however, possible that a word meaning 'crazy, stupid, mad', and the like, NE several dialects aiçq R I 373; Tel. alu: do. 387; Khâk. aiçq and SW Osm. alik is a survival of this word. See Doerfer II 535. 'Kip., Oğuz, xî aiçq 'al-radît min kull şay' 'bad' in aluating Kaş. I 64; also occurs in I 384, 6 in a verse (repeated in I 85, 5, with yavuz instead of aiçq) (the men who reckoned it good fortune to have a guest have all disappeared) kaldî: aiçq oyuk körüp evni: yîkar baqîyalladın ida ra'awu'l-hayâl nagaqâd axbiyatahum kaylâ yanzi' alayî 'but those who, when they see a mirage, strike their tents in order that (a guest) may not lodge with them, have remained'; aiçq is not specifically translated but must have meant 'wicked' or the like; Xwar. xiv aiçq 'weak, inadequate' Quba 8: Kip. al-cabâb 'cowardly' (opposite to 'brave' alp) aiçq Hou. 26, 4: xiv alu: al-âçiz 'an qarîmîhî 'weaker than (or inferior to) his adversary'; bu: bundan alu: dur 'this is inferior (âçiz) to that'; and for a'câz 'more inferior' they say alurak Id. 22: Osm. xiv ff. alu 'weak, inferior', often in contrast to ulu 'great' or yêç 'better', common in xiv and xv and occurs in xvi TTS I 23; II 31; III 18; IV 19.

?D alk/ałuk; it is an open question how many etymologically different words of these forms there are and which of them can be explained as Pass. Dev. N./A. fr. al-. This is obviously true of the word in KB, and possibly true of Kaş's Oğuz meaning of aluk. But it is less obviously true of Kaş's meaning of aluk, and rather improbable of the Kip. meaning. It is difficult to connect NC Kir. allik 'peak, summit' R I 372 with any earlier meaning, but SW xx Anat. alik/ałuk retains the second early Osm. meaning and has other meanings like 'driftwood carried away by a flood' which clearly represent a Dev. N. fr. al-. See Doerfer II 547. (O. Kir. ix ff. the word read in aluk in Mal. 44, 2 is corrected to alp in Schcherbak's revised text): Xak. xî KB tükel bülse bolmaz kîlîklîmî yêmë alsa bolmaz aliklîklîmî 'it is impossible (for a servant) to understand completely (his master's) character, D 1 ulāq Dev. N. fr. ula-; lit. 'something joined on', and the like with various specific applications. Survives only(?) in NC Kir. ulo: 'joining, attaching', and SW Osm. ulak 'something within easy reach'. Cf. sapiq. Uyğ. viii ff. Man.-A ulaq sapaqda 'in endless succession' M III 13, 19 (ii): Bud. noted only in the Hend. ulaq sapiq which is common in TT VI, e.g. tuğa ollı ulaq sapiq 'the endless succession of birth and death' 015; o.o. 312, 345, 388, etc.; Sw. 61, 17: Xak. xi ulaq ruq'atul'l-tā'ib 'a patch on a garment' Kaş. I 122.

D 2 ulaq a technical term for a horse used for carrying goods or riding, more particularly a horse for hire and a post horse. The specific meaning seems to be that it is one of a string of horses available for hire or use, and it may originally have meant a string of horses rather than a single animal, but if so this meaning became obsolete very early. It is therefore prob. a Dev. N. fr. ula-, etymologically identical with I ulaq, but with a specialized meaning. An early l.-w. in Mong. as ula'a'ulaqa (Haenisch 162, Kow. 304) 'posthorse, relay horse'. S.i.a.m.l.g. in a wide range of forms including such divergent ones as NC Kir. ulo,, ulo; uno: See Doerfer II 521. Uyğ. viii ff. Civ. ulaq 'transport horse let out on hire' is common in late contracts e.g. mapa Sara-pçuca Usunka barçu eşek ulaq kergek bolup 'as I, Sarańuţ, needed donkeys and transport animals (or 'donkeys for transport') to go to Usun'. Uṣp. 3, 2-3; (I gave one roll of cloth for) Mekilin Kurcanın ulaqka 'Mekilin Kırça's transport animal(s)' and (fifteen rolls of cloth for) Kültürtley ulaq terike 'the hire of Kültürtley's transport animal(s)' do. 31, 9-13; o.o. 38, 15, 39, 41; 20: Xak. xi ulaq 'any horse (faras) which an express post-ride (al-baridul-l-musri') takes' by order of the amir (i.e. beg) and rides until he finds another' Kaş. D 2 ellig P.N./A. fr. 1 ēl; originally lit. 'having a realm', it soon came to mean 'king', perhaps at first to supply a word with this meaning for translations of Bud. and Man. scriptures. In Uyğ. Bud. it is often combined, or alternates, with xamn. q.v. It then came to be spelt, and perhaps pronounced, ellig with a singl-l-1, and perhaps, at some uncertain later date, ilig. In Persian it suffered further changes, e.g. to erek, but this was prob. never really a Turkish word. Apart from the refrains below, the only occurrences seem to be in NC Kir. ęllı 'populated'; ęldik (1) 'democrat';

D almalık A.N. (Conc. N.) fr. alma:; 'apple orchard'. Survives in its literal meaning in some NW and SW languages, but used as a place-name over a much wider area. Does not occur in any Turkish text before xv, and then only as a place-name, but occurs as a place-name in a Sogdian document found at Mount Mug in Fergana which can be firmly dated to the first quarter of viii. It is unfortunately impossible to determine which of the various places with this name is referred to, but it must have been within reasonable distance of Fergana, and the name must be a legacy from the period when the Western Türkü ruled in this area. Türkü viii in a much damaged Sogdian document, II; relating to the issue of various kinds of military equipment, quivers, weapons, etc. it is stated (l. 4) that 'dmduruq yordam mira 'the assistant to the governor of Amlalag' (Sogdian d (Hebrew lamed) here used with its original value l) received five weapons of an uncertain kind, M. 1 alâş basic meaning uncertain; it seems to be 'level open ground' with some implication that it is, in particular, 'an area of open level ground, a clearing, in a forest'. Survives in this meaning as alân in NW Kaz. R I 359; SW Osm. and xx Anat. SDD 90 and 139 (aylan); in the last it also means 'level open ground' in general. Tkm. alâş now means 'hill, high ground'. I 179 (alar: mur (sic), alarma:k).

iler- acc. to Kaş. ‘to be dimly visible’. Became a l.-w. in Mong. as ilere- ‘to appear, become clearly visible’ (Kov. 300, Halâtd 67). NE Tel. iler- with the latter meaning, R I 1480, might be either a survival or a re-borrowing fr. Mong. Cf. ilerî. Xak. xi menîn közîmê: nêp ilerîî: taxayyalâ/al-yâyî fi ’âyî fi byd’aw zulma ‘the thing was dimly visible to my eyes in the distance or the dark’; (in verse) tâlgâ:bash: ilerîî: ‘the heads of the mountains were dimly visible’ Kaş. I 179 (no Aor. or Infin.); II 283, 3 (same verse).

olur- (olor-) ‘to sit’, with various extended meanings. The phonetics of this word are complicated. The Caus. f. olûgurt- q.v. suggests that the original form was olûgûr-, but there is no other trace of such a word. The only form in Uyğ. and earlier languages is olur-, but this form survives only in NE Tuv.

olur- and Yakut olor- Pek. 1819. In Xak. there are two forms olur- and oltur- which are best explained as very early examples of the Turkish habit of dis-similating -tt- to -tt- (cf. the pronunciation alda for âllahî in some modern languages). The form oltur- still survives in some modern languages, but in others the -tt- has been assimilated to -tt- (some NE languages), -d- (other NE languages) or -t- (all SW languages and some others). The verb originally meant ‘to sit’, possibly with a distinction of meaning between ‘to sit down on (something Dat.)’ and ‘to be seated on (something Loc.)’. The special application to rulers seems to have been pec. to the early period. Another shade of meaning is (of nomads) ‘to settle down, reside’ (in a particular place); in some languages only of temporary settlement, permanent settlement being described by yat-. In some modern languages used as an Auxiliary Verb, preceded by a Ger. in -p, meaning ‘to do (something) habitually, continuously, or frequently’, but sometimes with a very tenuous meaning. Türkî VIII olur- is very common in three distinct meanings; (1) ‘to sit down (for a rest)’ I E 27, II E 22; T 51–2 (udş.:); (2) ‘to take (one’s) seat on the throne’ xağan olurtum ‘I took my seat as xağan’ I S 9, II N 7; a.o. ulus has a curious history; originally it meant ‘country’ in a geographical sense, as opposed to 1 êlî (q.v.) with its political implications, but it began to be associated with the names of cities, and by xî in some languages it meant ‘city’ rather than ‘country’. An early 1.-w. in Mong., where it became ulûs to comply with Mong. phonetics and acquired a political rather than a geographical sense. It was originally used for the largest political unit known, the Mong. empire (see XIII below), and when this was split into four between the four sons of Çingis it was used for each of these four parts, e.g. ‘the ulûs of Çaqata’. Then, since the Mongols thought more in terms of peoples than of territories, it came to mean ‘a confederation of peoples (êlî), the peoples being divided into ‘tribes’ (aymaq), the tribes into ‘clans’ (boy), and these into families (uruq). All these words, except perhaps the third, were Turkish and the second, fourth, and fifth have a continuous history in Turkish, but the first had so completely lost its original meaning that when it was reintroduced into Turkish it appeared in its Mong. form ulûs (not ulûs) and with its Mong. meaning. Ulûs seems to survive only in NW Kar. L. R. I 1697; in all other language groups (except NC where it is obsolete) it is ulûs ‘nation, people, tribe’, and the like. Türkî vii (in the list of foreign powers represented at Kül Teğin’s funeral) Buxarîk ulûs ‘the country of the Bokhariots’ (prob. in Inner Mongolia, not Bokhara itself, see S. G. F amaq a very early l.-w. fr. Pe., no doubt acquired with the plough, when the Turks first became agriculturalists. Persian ãmâc meant primarily ‘plough’, thence ‘a heap of earth thrown up by the plough’, thence ‘such a heap, perhaps further enlarged, used as an archery target’, and thence ‘a furlong, one twenty-fourth of a parasang’, a suitable distance for an archery range. Kaṣ. noted two of these meanings, San., who recognized the word as Pe., gave only one Turkish meaning. It is listed in SE Ṭürkî amaq ‘plough’ Shaw 14; SC Sart ditto R I 646; Uzb. omoq ‘plough’ (obsolete) Bor. 304 and in SW Tkm. omaq ‘plough’ (obsolete). It existed in SW Osm. fr. an early period (see below), but Red. marked it as Pe. and so did Sam. 54, describing it as a ‘superfluous’ word for ‘target’. It has, however, been adopted in Rep. Turkish meaning (physically) ‘a target’ and (metaph.) ‘aim, objective’ on the ground that it means ‘target’ in SW Anat. (amaq SDD 98; emeç do. 528). See Doerfer II 552 and cf. bokursî. Xak. xi amaq (Tâmac) al-hadaf ‘target’; amaq al-faddan wa hiya ala’tûl-filîha ‘plough’, that is an agricultural implement Kaṣ. I 52; o.o. all meaning ‘target’. Çag. xv ff. amaq (sic) ‘an iron implement (bit) which farmers fasten to the necks of oxen and use to plough the land’; in this meaning the word is shared (muṣṭarîk) with Pe.; and in Pe. it also means ‘a mound of earth (xâki) on which they put an archery target, a king’s throne, and one twenty-fourth of a parasang’ San. 50v. 1: Xwar. xiv omaq/oamanç ‘target’ Qutb 198: Kip. xiv amac al-ǧaradu’l-mutaqûrîb (tted mutaǧâräd) ‘a target which is near’ (‘aimed at’) Id. 23: xv namar ‘target’ omanç (sic) Tuh. 33b. 13: Osm. xiv ff. amac, often spelt omanç c.i.a.p. E amuç one of the few serious scribal errors in Kaṣ. In I 140, 7, after translating armagăn (‘gift’) and saying that there is an alternative form yarmagăn, wa huvâ aomuc is added. ?D amtî: ‘now’. Prima facie, an Adv. in -tî: (Studies, p. 145) fr. *am, but the only trace of this word in this sense is in NE Sag., Şor R I 643, Khak. and Tuv, where it exists side by side with ṣamî, and looks like an abbreviation of that word. It certainly had back vowels as late as Xak. but in some Uyg. texts it seems to be spelt with e-. The dental was certainly unvoiced in Türkî and voiced in Xak. and later; the position in Uyg. is uncertain owing to the ambiguity of the script. S.i.a.m.i.g., with back vowels only in NE. umây originally 'placenta, afterbirth'; also used as the name of the (only?) Turkish goddess, whose particular function was to look after women and children, possibly because this object was supposed to have magic qualities. Survives, more or less in the second meaning, in NE Sor umay R I 1788; Khak. umay (n) and NC Kir. umay; the last also means 'a mythical bird that builds its nest in the air', but this is merely a corruption of Persian hnumay. Preliminary note. Apart from n there were three nasal sounds in early Turkish: dental n, which has survived in all languages, guttural ñ, which has survived in some languages, been weakened to ň in others and in a few, under the influence of Mong. (see Studies, p. 220), strengthened to ñg, ñı, and palatal ñ, which was already becoming obsolete in VIII and has now evolved into ñ or a combination of the two, usually metathesized, see Clauzon, 'The Turkish Y and Related Sounds' in Studia Altaica, Festschrift für Nikolaus Poppe, Wiesbaden, 1957. There is some difficulty in texts in Arab. script in distinguishing between ñ and ng, but the latter combination seems to occur only when -q- is the first letter of a suffix, and in Kaş. words containing ñ are placed in special sections for words containing that sound. Some authorities, e.g. Id., tried to overcome the difficulty by representing ñ by n with a diacritical mark, usually three subscribed dots, but this mark is often lacking in the surviving MSS.; in others ñ sometimes seems to be used to represent ñ.

D ança: Equitative form of ol; properly 'as much as that', but normally in the early period hardly more than 'thus'. There is also, in the early period, a Sec. f. beginning with t- of this and other cognate words (anççp, anççrç). This is usually transcribed inçe, a spelling which does occur in TT VIII, but as there is also a spelling inça in those texts, and as the word survives in this form in NE Tuv., it is likely that the original form was inça: and that inçe is merely one of several examples of the tendency of t- to move into a front position (cf. i:ç, i ti:ç, etc.). S.i.a.m.lg. as ança and the like. As inça: always means 'thus', some editors of early texts have tended to 'correct' words meaning 'thus' to inçe even when ança: is clearly written. See Doerfer II 560. In U III 92, in a note on 32, 16 it is suggested that it is the Chinese phr. an chu 'to live in peace' (Giles 44 2,527); the semantic connection is not convincing, but the word is prob. a Chinese l.-w. S inča/inče: See anča:

I inču: n.o.a.b.; poorly attested in the early period, the only occurrences being in Uyğ. Civ. documents of which one certainly, and the other two probably, date from the Mong. period. There is, however, no good reason for supposing that this is a l.-w. The only early (xiii) Mong. word of comparable form is ince 'a maid-servant given to a bride at her marriage' (Haenisch 83, there connected with Chinese ying, same meaning (Giles 13,343)) which is no doubt the original form of inči 'dowry' (Kow. 280, Haltad 62). This latter is a Mong. l.-w. in various NE languages and NC Kır., Kzx. There is no real semantic connection between these Mong. words and inču: which at any rate in the medieval period had much the same meaning as English 'heir', that is 'a piece of land granted by a ruler on condition of the performance of certain services', and, by extension, 'the person(s) bound to perform such services'. Whether this was the original meaning it is hard to say. It has been plausibly suggested that this is the word which appears in the Staël-Holstein scroll, a Khotanese Saka document dated a.d. 925, in the forms 'iņša and inči, meaning apparently 'the chief tribe in a confederation', that is the ruler's own tribe (see Asia Major, n.s., vol. II (1951), p. 17; vol. IV (1954), pp. 90 ff.). The original meaning may have been nearer to 'family or clan property', and in particular 'a chief's own property'. See Doerfer II 670. Uyğ. viii ff. Vel. 32 lists ann (spelt ann) transl. it annə ətirn 'therefore' and supporting it by a quoitn. Soy. 52r. 10 (o.o. ann) says that the correct reading in this verse is ann and that Vel. got ann from a faulty MS, and gave it an 'invented' (ixtrərə) meaning; the spelling is unusual, but ann 'therefore' suits the context better than ann, and may well be right; in any event Vel.'s translation shows that the word was still known in early xvi.

art- Preliminary note. There are two verbs of this form; one, Trans. ‘to load (baggage, etc.) on (an animal, etc.)’, the Pass. and Refl. fs of which in SW xx Anat. show that it was originally ard-; the other, Intrans., ‘to grow bigger, increase’, which was always art-, since its der. fs like artuk are spelt with -t- in all modern languages. The first is first noted in Osm. XVII, but its Pass. and Refl. fs are noted in Xak. XI, the second is noted fr. an early period.

ordu: ordolu; (ordo) originally ‘a royal residence’, that is ‘palace’ or ‘royal camp’ as the circumstances demanded; in the religious (Bud. and Man.) texts also ‘a heavenly mansion’. An early 1.-w. for ‘palace, royal camp’ as ordo in Mong. (Haensch 125). Survives as ordo/ordo in NE Tur; ordo; SE Türkî orda Shaw 20, B6 761, far- ring 215 (with Sec. f.s.); NC Kir, ordo; Kızı orda; SC Uzhr. orda; NW Kl, Nog. orda; SW Az., Osm. ordu, Tkm. orda. In SW Az., Osm. it came to mean ‘a royal camp’, hence any ‘military camp’ and finally, in military terminology, the largest type of military formation, ‘army’. Elsewhere it retained its original meaning, but there are indications that in some languages it was reborrowed fr. Mong. See Doerfer II 452. Tef. 8â (dubious; Bor. enters the same quots. under Ėrtî- and Ėrût-, as the Object of the verb is āltûn kûmîş kânîrû (gold and silver mines' the first is the likeller): xiv Muh. adûba Ėrît- Mel. 22, 5; Rif. 102: Çağ. xv ff. Ėrît- Caus. f.; Ėrûtnâdan 'to melt,' in Ar. Ėrûdâ âsâîsan 97v. 24 (quots.). Kip. xiv (Dâzdr- adûba) this in the Kitûb Beylik, but our master Fârûl-din said 'this is wrong, adûbâa is Ėrît- because ēbû is Ėrî- while siz- means nađîca fi nafshî 'to be fully ripe' or the like' Id. 57.

D Ėraš- Caus. f. of Ėrâ-; 'to send (someone Acc.) away, or far away.' For the phonetics see investigate the matter closely' 292; similar phr. 321; Osm. xiv to xvi Irde- (sic) 'to seek, inquire for' occurs in several sentences, sometimes in Hend. with sor- and Is-te-, but one xvi dict. translates Per. custan 'to seek' by iste- and Irde- as if they had slightly different meanings TTS I 387; II 544; III 380; IV 434.

D örte-: Den. V. fr. ört 'to light, or burn (something Acc.)'. S.i.a.m.l.g. (in SW only Tkm.) w. some phonetic changes; some NE and NC forms contain double -tt- which suggests that these go back not to this V. but to örtle- which survives in SW xx Anat. SDD 158. Uyg. viii ff. Man.-A oltuq [gap] kyurur örteür 'burns (Hend.) the firewood' M I 18, 1–2; a.o. D artal- (ardal-) Pass. f. of 1 art- (ard-); 'to be loaded (on to something)' and the like. Survives as artal- in NE Khak.; SE Türkî; NC Kir. and as ardül- in SW xx Anat. SDD 111. Xak. x1 er at üze: artülül: ağıq'l-racul nafṣahu 'alâl'faras 'the man threw himself across the horse' in such a way that half his body was one side of it and the other half the other side; and one says taşqar eşeyek üze: artülül: 'the sack was loaded (humlat) on to the donkey' Kaş. I 244 (artülür, artülümek; Çağ. xv ff. art- 'to increase' fr 2 art-), and tabâpî kardan wa qaṭra zadan 'to bustle about, make haste' San. 35r. 24 ff.; this is a curious mistake, the translation having apparently been falsely deduced from two quots.; one is têpiz eyleben qat' u tâq artülül 'crossing the ocean and throwing himself over the mountains' (mistranslated 'hurriedly crossing the ocean and mountains'); it is said in 35v. 5 that Vel. read artayip or artanip and invented a verb arta-jartan- meaning 'to cross'; in fact, although the reading is faulty, the translation is about right; the other is bu körür her kirkikime artülül bir qaṭra yaṣ (not translated) which clearly means 'this man sees a drop of moisture loaded on each of my eyelashes': Osm. xvi Ar. al-muţlaq translated 'an animal which is let loose after its halter has been put round its neck' (yulâr boynuna ardulmîş) TTS II 47.

D Irtel- Hap. leg.; Pass. f. of irtel- Xak. x1 irtelûl: nev fîhîna 'anîl-šay' wa fîhîba 'the thing was inquired for and sought' Kaş. I 245 (irtelûr, irtelmek).

D örtel- Pass. f. of örtel-; 'to be set on fire, burnt'. Survives only (?!) in NE Khak.; NC Kir., Kxz. Xak. x1 bük örtelîl: urbiqat'l-ğayîdal 'the thick tangled trees were burnt' Kaş. I 245 (örtelûr, örtelmek).

D örtül- Pass. f. of ört-; 'to be covered, concealed', also in the early period 'to be put over (üzê: something) as a covering'. Survives in the same languages as ört-. Uyg. vii ff. Bud. Sanskrit nivratânam 'of those who are covered, örtülümelslerke: (sic) TT VII A. 15; bilgisizlik karaqû üzê köpülm örtülülp 'my mind being covered with the darkness of ignorance' Sun. 101, 16-17, similar phr., but mis-spelt örtülüp do. 136, 17; Xak. x1.13 er üzê: örtülül: ubhîma'l-am 'alâl'racul 'the thing was put over the man as a covering'; and one says kök örtülül: 'the sky was overcast (tâgâyîmat); wa ʔasluh kull şay' sutîra tabhîl-şay' 'basically (it is used of) anything that is concealed under something else' Kaş. I 244 (örtülûr, örtülümek; second phr. repeated I 139, 18; 13 örtülül: 'the thing was obscure, ambiguous' (İlhabâb) II 237, 13:

Osm. xvi örtülül- (of a port) 'to be storm-bound' TTS II 568.

D artla- (ardla-) Den. V. fr. art (ard). Survives in NE Tuv. artta- 'to step over (the back of something)', SW xx Anat. ardla- 'to follow up (something)' SDD 111. Xak. x1 ol ani: artla'dîl: ʔaʃa ʔahu 'he slipped him on the back of the neck' Kaş. III 443 (artlar, artlamak).

D artûn- (ardûn-) Refl. f. of 1 art- (ard-); 'to load (something Acc.) for, or on to oneself', Survives as artûn- in NE Alt., Tel., Khak., Tuv.; SE Türkî and NC Kir., Kxz., and as ardün- in SW xx Anat. SDD 111. Xak. x1 er arçûn artûndîl: 'the man loaded (hâmalu) his saddle-bag on the pack animal' also used of other things Kaş. I 250 (artûnur, artûnmak).

D örtên- Refl. f. of ört-; 'to blaze, burn (Intrans.) to be burnt'. Survives in much the same languages as ört-: Türkî vii ff. ulûg év örtenmi:ς 'a big house was burnt down' Irbîb 9; Man. M III 7, 11-12 (ii) (sağûrul-); kûryûgey örtengeyesîn 'you will be burnt' (Hend.) do. 23, 4 (ii); Uyg. viii ff. I 250 (örtûnûr, örtûnmek); xiii (?) Tef. örtûn-'to cover oneself' 250: Xwar. xiv ditto Nahc. 31, 7: Kip. xiii ışatarâ 'to hide oneself' örtûn- Hou. 36, 12: xv taqâffà ditto. (yapin- and) örtûn- Tuh. 9a. 5.

D artur-, etc. Preliminary note. It is morphologically almost impossible to distinguish between the Caus. f.s. of ax- and art-. Only those of 2 ax- and 2 art- occur in the early period. Ardur- Caus. f. of 1 ax- 'to tire (someone) out' is first noted in XIV Muh. Mel. 41, 12; 42, 2; Rif. 132 and survives in NW Kaz. Artur- / arttur- the Caus. f. of 1 art-(ard-) exists in several NE, SE, and NC languages, but is not noted before XIX.

D 1 artur- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of 2 ar-; cf. the quotns. under that word, and artiz-. Türkii viii sicig savqqa: yumskag qagriqsa: artur-upa úkuş Türkii bodun őltig 'letting yourselves be tricked by their honeyed words and luxurious treasures many of you Türkii people died' I S 6; II N 5.

D 2 artur- Caus. f. of 2 art-; 'to cause (something) to increase, grow bigger', with various extended meanings, esp. in SW. S.i.a.m.l.k., usually as artit/or/artur- Xak. xi in yarmak üze: biti arturdu: zada ʃaʃid 'alà 'ajarà daràhàm 'he added one more on top of the ten silver coins'; and one says er arturdu: adàda-raçul laterahu 'the man gave himself airs'; (verse) keldi: berü: arturu: bürdi: élùn (VÜ) ertürüi: 'he came towards us with an enormous army, boasting and giving himself airs (yazlaf wa ya'da jarradu); then he surrendered his realm to us' (the third and sixth words are vocalized the same, but must have different meanings; the first is obviously arturu: 'boasting'; the second is not specifically translated, but the likeliest explanation is that it is the Ger. of 2 ertür- 'letting it pass to us') Kas. I 219 (artitur, arturmak): KB (he went every day) tapüq arturu 'giving more and more service' 610; şukur kilsa ni'mat bayat arturur 'if (a man) gives thanks, God increases His favours to him' 756: xini(?) At. akilik şaraf câh camal arturur 'generosity increases a man's honour, dignity, and grace' 258; Tef. artur- 'to make greater 60: Çağ. xv ff. artur- ziyyd kardan 'to increase (Trans.)' San. 355: Xwar. xiv ditto Qubb 11: Kom. xiv 'to surpass' artur- CCG; Gr. 2: Kip. xiii zada artur- Hou. 40, 14: xiv (the Perf. of art- is arti); this is Intrans. (al-lääsimi) but in the Trans. (al-muta'addi) you say aarti: Sd. 10; (after ar- t-) zada jil'say 'to increase the quantity in something' artur- Bul. 45r.: xvi zada artur- Tuh. 188: 4: Osm. xiv to xvii artur- occurs in a few texts TTS I 45; II 58; III 41.

D ertür-, etc. Preliminary note. As in the case of artur-, verbs of this form may be Caus. f.s of 1 er-, 2 er- or 1 or 2 ert-, but all early forms seem to be explicable as Caus. f.s of 2 er-, which is rare, or 1 ert- which is not much commoner.

D 1 ertür- Caus. f. of 2 ert-; 'to cause to arrive, bring to a successful conclusion' and the like. Survives only(? in SW Osm. erdir-. Türkii viii tokuznc ay yeti: otuzka: yergi ertürtimiz 'we brought the funeral ceremonies to a conclusion on the 27th of the 9th month' I NE; similar phr. II S 10; a.o. I E 40 (ükün:).

D 2 ertür- Caus. f. of 1 ert-; 'to cause to pass, pass by', etc. with various extended meanings. Survives as eertiř/ertîrî- in most NE languages R I 793, Khak., Tuv., and perhaps NC Kx. (R I 793, not MM). Uyğ. xiv ff. Bud. [gap] ertür Timiz 'we have passed (our lives?)' U III 16, 2; üç yavlan yolun ertürgeyi umakni (a cause) 'of being able to pass by (i.e. avoid) the three evil roads' TT V 22, 32; ertürmeüzün 'let (Sîlabhadra) not allow (Hüen-ts. 309): Cív. ertürmeüzün 'one must pass (the time)' TT VIII I 18: Xak. xii anyı yazukun ertürüli: 'he pardoned (şafiha 'an) his sins'; and one says anyı ışın ertürüli: 'he authorized (acăza) his affair, that is he agreed to it (quabilahu); also used of anyone who overlooks something (câwaza sa' an matedi) Kas. I 229 (erturür, ertürmelek); a.o. I 219 (artur-).

D ertur- Caus. f. of ur-; with a corresponding range of meanings. Survives as urdur- in NE Khak.; NE Kür.; SC Uzb. (urdur-), some NW languages and SW Tkm. and urdur- in SW Az.; Osm. Türkii viii icin taşın ad pomiędzy urdur-tim 'I have various decorations placed inside and outside' (Kül Tég'in tomb) I S 12: Uyğ. xvii ff. Bud. bejdik kapılardı ... urturup 'having them placed on large waggons' U III 40, 28-9: (Xak.) xiii(?) Tef. urdur-/urdur- 'to order to put (something Acc., into something Dat.)' 331: xiv Rbg. urdur- 'to let oneself be beaten' (with something birile) R I 1672 (quotn.): Çağ. xv ff. urdur- ('with u') mağrib sâxtan 'to cause to be beaten' San. 67v. 22: Xwar. xiv urdur- 'to order to put (something Acc., on something üze) Qubb 190: Osm. xv urdur- 'to order that (a country Acc.) should be attacked' in one text TTS III 710.

D örtür- Hap. leg. (?); Caus. f. of 1 às-; 'to grow (a plant, etc. Acc.)'. Uyğ. viii ff. Mán. A M I 14, 10-11 (t).

D artaş- Co-op. f. of arta-. Survives only (?) in NE Şâq, 'Tel. artaş-fartas- 'to fall out with one another' R I 309, 322. Xak. xi yalşık için artaşı: fasadâl-mâs ba'duhum bi-nu'ya ba'd 'some of the people became corrupt in the view of the others(?); also used of a number of things (kull sa'y katır) when some of them become corrupt among the rest Kas. I 230 (artasur, artasmak); i:i: any artaşıp fasadâ anrûtu 'his affairs deteriorated' I 219, 4.

D artış- (ardış-) Co-op. f. of 1 art- (ard-); 'to help (someone Dat.) to load (something Acc.)', and the like. S.i.s.m.l. Xaq. xi ol maça: arçi: artişi: 'he helped me to load (qânani 'alâ ilqâ ... wa hamilihi) the saddle-bag on the baggage animal'; also used for 'to compete' Kas. I 231 (artışı: artisimak).

D eritî- Recip., etc. f. of 1 er-. Survives only (?) in NE Khak. Bas. 63. Xak. xi ol meniğ birle: arstådan erdişi: 'he competed with me in getting past (fi'l-muğawaza) the lion', or anything else that is feared Kas. I 231 (eritîsûr, erıtîsme:); in the para. on the river Erïš, I 97, it is said that the name is taken from the word eritî meaning hârîni fi'l-muğûhara 'compete with me in crossing', no doubt a false etymology.
D ırtes- Co-op. f. of ırte-; n.o.a.b.; SW xx Anat. ırteş- 'to quarrel, push one another about' is a Sec. f. of ırteş-. Xak. xi ıs.oar bu: sőzüg ırteştile: infajhax a hdd’il- halîm 'they scrutinized this statement', or affair, or something else Kaş. I 230 (Irteşür, Irteşmek); a.o. I 230, 4 (İ öç).

D orteş- Recip., etc. f. of orte-; lit. 'to burn one another, to burn (something) together', and the like. Survives in NE Khak.; NC Kır.; NW Kaz. (ürteş-), usually for 'to be angry with one another' or the like (and see SW ırteş-). Xak. xi ıs.bûn bîr lîkîndinç evler:ın ırteşdi: 'the people burnt (ahraqa) one another’s houses'; also used for 'to compete and to help' Kaş. I 231 (örteşür, ırteşmek); Öğrak bile: ırteşip competing with the Öğrak in burning (each other’s property) II 219, 5 (the translation in Kaş. is obviously wrong).

D örtiş- Hap. leg.; Co-op. f. of ört-. Xak. xi ıs.oar bu: ısgï irţuşdi: 'they mutually agreed to conceal (tavwî‘û ‘alâ satr) this affair'; also used for 'to help someone to hide or conceal (țîğiyya . . . wa satr) something' Kaş. I 230 (örüşür, ırüşmek).

D artiz- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of 2 ār-. Cf. I artur-. Türkî viii ff. Man. terrîl yana igitdeyü terğiçimem nömçümên têqmeke artizip ‘letting (myself) be deceived by one who says falsely and untruthfully “I am a man of God and a preacher”’. Chus. 135-6.

*arku: See arkuç, arkuru, argula:-

VU urgu: Hap. lcg.; the translation does not make it clear whether it is a generic term or the name of a specific kind of tree. Oguz, Argu:
D arguç Hp. leg.; Dev. N. (N.I.); fr. 2 ar.-. Xak. xi arguç 'anything by which a man is deceived' (yuğtur); hence the world is called arguç ajun al-diniyə garır (sic) Kaś. I 95.

(D) arkağ 'the wool (or weft) of a woven material'. S.i.a.m.l.g. except SW. During the medieval period a synonymous word argun appeared in Çağ. xv ff. (Son. 377. 8) and Osm. xiv ff. (TT S 34; II 48; III 33; IV 35), and is still the word used in this sense in SW Osm./Rep. Turkish; Tkm. It seems reasonable to suppose that these two words are Dev. N.s in -kağ and -ğ aç respectively fr. *ar- which cannot be identified with either 1 or 2 ar.- and possible that arįg 'warp', q.v., is also a Dev. N. fr. this verb, but in the last case there are some difficulties of vocalization. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. aruşi (?; spelt erüş) arkağ 'the wool of a horse and the wool'. TT VI 391 (arkuru); a.o. do. 394: Xak. x ii arkağ luhmatu'l-tawīb 'the wool of cloth' Kaś. I 118; a.o. I 61 (arış); xiv Muh. al-luhma arkağ Mel. 60, 9; Rif. 159 (misvocalized arkuğ).

arkuk 'obstinate, refractory', with a second meaning in Kaś.: N.o.a.b. Türki viii I S 8; II N 6 (1 tok): Xak. x x x arkuğ kişî: 'an obstinate, refractory (al-harîm person)'. arkuğ al-xâsabatul-mu'tarîda bayn hâ'itayn aw sâriyatyun 'a reverse strait between two walls or pillars' Kaś. I 109: KB (in a list of bad habits) taâ bîrî erke bu arkuğ kuînc, bu arkuğ kuînciğka bolmaz sevînc 'and another is refractory behaviour in a man, a man who behaves in a refractory way is not liked' (or 'has no pleasure in life')? 340; o.o. 1668, 1679, 2066; xiv Muh. al-qâdirî (? 'dirty' (? arkuğ Mel. 56, 3; Rif. 153 (neither word vocalized, the 'opposite is' corrupt and un-intelligible).

D irğuş Dev. N. (Conc. N.) fr. irğuş; (q.v., the semantic connection is obscure); 'hook' and the like. S.i.a.m.l.g. usually as irğuş. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. TT V 12, 118 (otluğ): Xak. x x x irğuş 'a hook (al-şiş) used to catch fish'. irğuş 'an iron hook (al-xuttâf) used to draw ice from the water to the ice-house' Kaś. I 141: Xwar. xiv (the elephant would not get up however much they hit him) temûr irğaklar birlî 'with iron elephant goads' Nahe. 42, 15; o.o. ('hook') 268, 1-2: Kom. xiv 'hook' irğuş (sic) CC; Gr.: Kip. xiv irğuş al-kullâb wa'll-sînînra 'iron hook'; fish hook' Íd. 11; Bul. 5, 3 (misvocalized irğûh): xv zaqlam (?), (corrupt) wa'll-kullâb irğuş Tuh. 18a. 2.

D orguç N.I. fr. ır-; 'sickle, reaping hook'. S.i.a.m.l.g. as orguç/orak, sometimes with the additional meaning 'harvest'. Xak. x x x orguç al-mincal 'sickle' Kaś. I 119; six o.o. translated al-mincal or anâmîl-mincal 'the teeth of a sickle': xiv Muh. al-mincal orguç Mel. 60, 4; orguç Rif. 159: Cağ. xv ff. orguç/orak dâs 'sickle', in Ar. miḥsad, mincal Son. 70v. 24: Kip. xiii al-mincal worak (sic?) Hou. 9, 11: xv mincal orak Tuh. 34a. 11; 40a. 8 (and in a second hand in the margin of 13b. 9 against hasja or-); Osm. xv ff. orak (once in xv oğuç) 'sickle' in several texts TT S 536, 547; II 734; III 547.

argun Hap. leg.; prob. 'weasel' or the like. Xak. x x x argun dawaybîha min essîl-l-curdan 'a small animal of the rat family' with a body about half a cubit long, which hunts birds in the services of walls; if it jumps on a sheep, the (sheep's) flesh turns yellow, and if it jumps on a man when he is asleep he is seized with strangury (al-usur) Kaś. I 120.

1 arkon 'cross-bred': Survives in SE Türki argun/arğun BS 30; NC Kir. argun with various applications animal and human. Xak. x x x arkon faras mutwallad 'a cross-bred horse', the offspring of a wild stallion and a tame mare, the fastest kind of horse in a race Kaś. I 107; arkon mûnûp iðdâ rakibâl-l-cavâd 'riding a swift horse' I 421, 17; KB kevel midînî arkon 'you ride a cross-bred of high quality' 5803; uçar kuş teğ arkon ağımda kürêtîm 'I made the cross-bred horse which I bestrode gallop like a flying bird' 6536; a.o. 5369 (bükkel).

2 arkon 'next year'; n.o.a.b. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. (they rely on an irregular calendar, thinking that with it they will be out of danger; it is more or less beneficial to their bodies) inçip arkon ağır ada tuda keiser 'then when next year there come serious dangers (Hend.)' TT VI 262-3: Xak. x x x arkon imam'l-âmîl-muqabil 'a word for the coming year'; hence one says arkon (VU) 12x: 'âm muqabil 'wa qubabîh 'next year and the year after' Kaś. I 108; I 89, 16 (ızî).

arkar prob. always 'the mountain sheep, Qiris argali', although the Ar. words used by Kaś. normally mean 'mountain goat, chamois' (it is likely that the animal was exotic to Arabs and had no specific name in Ar.). S.i.a.m.l., see Scherbak, p. 117, usually as a generic term without indication of sex. The Mong. synonym argali is perhaps a l.-w. fr. this word. Uyg. viii arkar başî: tuşînda: prob. 'opposite (the place called) Arkar başî'. Şu. 1: Xak. x x x arkar 'al-urciya, the female of al-tu'îl'; its horns are made into knife-handles Kaś. I 117; o.o. I 214, 17 (sokak); 421, 17 (translated al-xulâ'); Çağ. xv ff. arkar-î gâçî 'the wild (Pe. l.-w.) mountain sheep is mentioned twice in Babur (Glibb Memorial facsimile, 141v. 13; 276v. 10); alkar (sic) qüç-i kâhi 'mountain ram' Son. 50r. 20.

D arkîş Dev. N. fr. 1 arkan- 'a person or group of persons travelling for commercial or official purposes', hence both 'travelling merchants, caravan', and 'official envoys, mission'; it is not always easy to see which is meant and merchants were often used as official envoys.
Survives in NE several dialects argiş, argiș R I 300-1; Kha. argiş 'travelling companion'; NC Kzx. argiș ditto R I 293 (not in MM); SW xx Anat. (arkis SDD 115) 1erkiş 'caravan' 546. See Doerfer II 460. Türki viii (the Ilasmul idikut was my subject) arkiş idmaz têyin sûldêm 'because he sent no envoys, I campaigned against him' II E 25; (gap) arkiş: kelimedi: (so read) 'no envoys came' II E 41; a.o. IJS 8, II N 6 (td-); Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. (then King Mahendrasena) tört yûpaktin kelmiş arkiş yalavaçlar okip 'summoning the envoys and ambassadors who had come from all four corners of the world' U I 21, 17-18; o.o. arkiş dirkîş same meaning U III 29, 2-3 (td-); no 11; arkiş do 29, 14; 30, 20; Hıien-ts. 12, 235-6, 1886: Xak. xi arkiş al-îr 'caravan' (prov., arkiş translated al-îfar 'traveller'); arkiş the word for 'an envoy' (al-mursil) to people from one's native country (al-awûlî); hence one says anîş arkiş: keldî: câ'a rasilûhî; also used in the sense of al-rasîla 'a mission' Kaş. Rossi, p. 332.

Dis. V. ARG-

I arka: - to search, investigate', etc. N.o.a.b., but no doubt the earlier form of the synonymous SW Osm., Tkm. word ara-, which is not traceable earlier than Son. 34r. 18 where it is treated as a Çağ. word, translated miyân-i çizî-rî tafaflûs kurdan 'to make an investigation into something', but illustrated only by a Rûmî quat. (Xak.) xiii(?) At. senîş birlikte dalî arkağan 'anyone who seeks a proof of Thy uniqueness' 7; (the Prophet) bîlîg Çinde erse siz arka têdi 'said seek knowledge (even) if it is in China' 104: Oğuz xî o l anîş evin arka: hâha ta mâ fi boytihi wâ tabalaba wâ hafahta mâ zanna fibî 'he enquired what was in his house and searched it and investigated what was in it' Kaş. I 283 (2 arka:- follows).

2 arka: - a rhyming jingle not used in isolation; n.o.a.b. Xak. xi (after I arka:- in the same para.), and one says o.l anîş: karğadî: arka:di: la'ana hu wâ jâkara ma'sa:ta:hu 'he cursed him and spoke of his wickedness'; used as a Hênd. (muzdatawîca) and not by itself; taken from their word for 'praise' (al-tanâ) alkiş; since it was used frequently in a Hênd. alka:- also acquired a pejorative meaning (cu'ila fil-lâr); and since it was originally laudatory the -r- was substituted for -r-, as mâlîş became marşış in Ar. Kaş. I 284 (arkar, arka:ma:k; the theory, though prima facie improbable may be correct, see kargan-).

irğa: - to shake, or rock (something Acc.); survives only(?) in NC Kir., Kzx.; it also existed earlier in SW Osm. but has there been displaced by the Freq. f.(?) irğala:-. It is difficult to connect this verb semantically with irğa:, but there is a NE Tuv. verb irğay- 'to be crooked' Pol. 570, and this suggests that there was originally a second verb -irğa:- with this meaning. Xak. xî oî yîqaç irğàdî: hazzâla-sarca wa nasadâha li-yasqit tamarûh 'he shook (Hend.) the tree so that the fruit should fall'; also used of other things Kaş. I 283 (irğar, irğamak); a.o. translated nasadá 316, 15; 321, 16: xiii(?); Tef. irğa:-to shake(a tree) 129 (Xwar. xiv irğa:-yirğa:- Quth 91, 206, and Kom. xiv irğa:- CGG; Gr. 133 both meaning 'to enjoy oneself' have no connection with this verb but are Sec. f. of a l.-w. fr. Mong. cîrâa (Harnisch 90) same meaning); Kip. xiv irğa:- harrâka fil'-madh wâ mâ násabahu 'to rock in a cradle' and the like, also pronounced irğa:-, which also means hazzâ Id. 11: Osm. xiv to xvi irğa:- to shake (something) in a few texts TTS I 353; IV 394.

D irğat- Caus. f. of irğa:-; properly 'to order (something) to be shaken', but from a fairly early date used in the same meaning as, and in place of, irğa:-. S.i.s.m.l. w. some phonetic changes like NC Kzx. irît-. Xak. xî oî yîqaç irğattî: anfadâl-sarca wa gavrohâ 'he had the tree (etc.) shaken' Kaş. I 263 (verse; no Aor. or Inf.). xiii(?); Tef. irğa:- to shake (someone) 129: Çağ. xv ff. irğa:- cunbânîndan 'to move, shake (something)' Sam. 98r. 17 (quot.).

D irğal- Pasp. f. of irğa:-; 'to be shaken, to sway', and the like. Survives: only(?) in NC Kir., Kzx. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. t irğalar irğalur 'the bushes and trees sway' Swc. 621, 5: Civ. ârtuç sûtût butikt yûz törliğin irğalur 'the stem of the juniper tree sways in every direction' TT I 165-6: Xak. xî yîqaç irğaldî: 'the tree was shaken' (nufqda); also used of anything that is shaken (huzzâ) Kaş. I 249 (irğalur, irğalmak): Kom. 'to be shaken, to sway' irğal- CGG; Gr.

D irkla:- Den. V. fr. irk; 'to cast lots, consult the omens'. Survives only(?) in SW Anat. irkla:- SDD 773. Uyğ. viii ff. Civ. D irğan- Refl. f. of irğa:-; to shake, rock, etc. (Intrans). The commensurate member of the group, s.i.a.m.l. a.o. Xak. xî yîqaç irğandî: ihtazzatî-sarca wa taharrakat 'the tree (etc.) shook and rocked' Kaş. I 254 (irğanur, irğanmak): Çağ. xv ff. irğan(-ip) irğala- Vel. 54; irğan- Refl. V., cunbîdan

VU(D) urğa: 'woman', more specific than tişq: which is also used of animals; morphologically a Dev. N. in -gut; noted only during a limited period but very common during that period, during which it displaced ēvqis: and the phr. uzun tonlış: and was used in parallel with ışīref (İşıref); in Çağ. it was displaced by urçäs (San. 71r. 18) which may be connected etymologically and s.i.m.l. including NC Kir., SC U.b., SW Tkm.; in other modern languages displaced by forms of kaš torrent and the Ar. l.-w. 'awrat, but it is possible that words in some Kip. texts (Hon. 25, 2; Id. 25; Tuh. 3b. 13) and elsewhere which have been described as, or taken to be, 'awrat written with initial alif instead of 'ayn are actually later, contracted forms of urğat. Mon. ERG erk has two basic meanings, (1) 'authority' that is the power to impose one's will on others; (2) 'free-will, independence' that is freedom to decide for oneself without being subject to the authority of others. It became an early l.-w. in Mong. as erke (Hunisch, p. 45) and s.i.a.m.lg. in a variety of forms, erk/erik, etc. sometimes with a less precise meaning, 'strength, power', and the like. Türkî viii ff. Man. (if we say that the sun and moon die, or that they rise and set involuntarily or) erk bar erser tuğmazın 'if they have free-will, let them refrain from rising' Chuus. 24-5: Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. (I could not prevent him) erkim tükenmedi 'my authority was not sufficient' PP 27, 4; erkimçe tapımı işlemed erser 'if I have acted as I chose and pleased' Swv. 136, 1; the word also occurs fairly often in the phr. erk türk 'free-will (or independence) and maturity' e.g. (as a result of that perception—Sanskrit vedana) ajunlaraka ed tavarka erkke türkke azlannam turur 'desire (Sanskrit tvamā) for rebirth, inanimate and animate possessions, independence, and maturity arise' U 110, 14-16; o.o. örük 'rest, repose (esp. in the course of a journey); quiet, restful'. Survives in NE Şir orugürü (3ic) 'quiet, modest' R I 1224, 1883; NC Kir. orüg orgüli; Kxz. erü 'a halt on a journey; sedentary' and SW xx Anat. orük 'a vacation' SDD 1117. The occurrences in Uyg. have been much misunderstood; sometimes it has been taken as a Sec. f. of urün and translated 'serene', which is not the meaning of either word (see e.g. TT V p. 28, note B.1) and sometimes transcribed urük, taken as derived fr. 1 ār and translated 'everlasting' (see e.g. Index to USp.). Uyg. viii ff. D erkî: An Adv. discussed in v. G. ATG para. 359 and Hiiën-ts. Biog., p. 21, note 62; in spite of the contrary opinion expressed therein, it seems, except on the rarest possible occasions, to be used only at the end of questions to indicate that a categorical answer is not expected; the best translation is, therefore, a paraphrase like ‘do you suppose that... it is likely that...’. Like erken and îrînc it seems to be a Dev. form fr. I er– dating back to a time when the verbal Suffs. were rather different fr. those in vii and viii. Survives only (?) in NE Tuv. îrgî ‘a particle used in questions to make them more polite’. Uyğ. viii ff. érkek ‘male, masculine’, in antithesis to tişî ‘female’, a generic term applied to men and animals; said in v. G. ATG, para. 59, to be an Intensive form in -kek of i er, but this is certainly wrong since the initial is é-, not e-, and there is no adequate evidence of the existence of a suffix -kek (as well as -ěk, which is not an Intensive). 1 ērekli P.N./A. fr. ērek; both 'possessing power or authority' and 'possessing free-will or independence, free to do as one likes'. The two meanings are very close together, and it is often difficult to decide which is intended; when applied to God prob. both are, and 'mighty' is the best translation, though it does not give the whole meaning. Survives in NC Kir. erktü; Kzx. īrkti, irikti, and NW Kar. L., T. īrkti; Kaz. irkti. The phr. īrkti was early adopted as the title of 'the ruler of the underworld'; it was borrowed by Mong. as ārkikan and this phr. has been reborrowed by some NE languages. Türkî viii ff. man. érken, ėrkên, éken, and jêkên usually without cross-references, and stating that they are all synonymous; but the examples show that ėrkên/ərkên has a different meaning and is a Sec. f. of erken; ėrkên ('with -k') is used with another word, e.g. bolmadi ėrkên olmâdim 'was it not?' (quotn.); ėrkên ('with -k' has the same meaning (quotn. containing ėrkennî 'his being') Vel. 49; ēken ('with -ğ'; sit in error) usually used with another word, e.g. fulân ėken fulân iken or idîgi 'being so-and-so' (quotns.); ēkên ('with -k') usually used with another word, e.g. bu ėrdî ėkên bu idî (quotns.) do. 64; ėrken (spelt) hast 'is' (quotn. containing tilîb ėrken dûr 'is mad'); also spelt ėrkên (quotn. ne ėrkên said to mean 'both what is' and 'what liberty of action?') also a lafî zêdî 'supplementary word' used dar rawûbît in 'compound expressions' (quotns.) San. 99y. 28 (several oblique cases of ėrkên follow); ėken (spelt) same translation as ėrkên (quotn.), also spelt ėkên San. 108v. 19 (several oblique cases follow); ėkên (spelt) inter alia; (2) abbreviation of ėrkên az cumula-i rawûbît meaning hast (quotn.); (3) a supplementary word used as an ornament in compound expressions (quotns.) do. 109r. 28; Xwar. xii ėrkên/āken while 'Ali 37.

D 1 ėrkên Intrans. Dev. N./A. fr. īrk-; 'collected together in one place' and the like. Survives in SW xx Anat. īrkên (and īrkîm) 'a hoard, buried treasure' SDD 796 and also perhaps Osm. īrkûn 'a pool of rain water' and the like. Xak. xı īrkên suv al-mâ'ûl-mustanga 'stagnant water'; also used of anything collected together (mućami); hence the chiefs (aškâbir) of the Karlik are called köl īrkên meaning 'his intellect is concentrated like a full pool' ('aşluha mućami kal'gadîril-muntamsîl') (see 2 īrkîn; īrkên yağmur al-mafârûl-dâ'im āyyâm 'continuous rain for several days' Kaş 1108.

2 īrkîn a title borne by tribal chiefs, inferior to xaşan but superior to beg. cf. elteber, 1 čor.' In addition to the occurrences in Turkish in the West, the word often occurs in Chinese records transcribed i-kin (sometimes mis-spelt si-kin owing to confusion between two similar Chinese characters). The subject is discussed at length by F. W. K. Müller in 'Ugurische Glossen' in the Festschrift für Friedrich Hirth, Berlin, 1920, pp. 317 ff. where it is stated that the title Kül īrkên (sic) also occurs in Rašidü'l-din and Abül-gâzî, but in the Russian translation of the former, Rashid-ad-din. Sbornik lotepisi, Moscow—Leningrad, 1952 ff., vol. 1, p. 147, the spelling is Kül īrkên. Kaş's etymology is unconvincing; it is almost certain that the title 2 Kül, q.v., is not identical with Köld; this word, too, is prob. merely a title, but if it is der. fr. īrk- the meaning is prob. something like 'convener'. Türkî viii anta: kâse: yer (? ) bayrûk: uļug īrkîn yağ: bolt: 'after that the paramount mount of the Yer (reading uncertain) Bayrûk: became hostile' I E 34; [? ulug] īlteber özî: keltî: sir (?) īrkên oğlî: YÎgen Çor keltî: 'the great (?) īltêber (of . . . ) came himself; Yîgen (or Yîgen?) D 1 aril- Hap. leg.; the context seems to suggest that this should be taken as a Pass f. of 1 a-r: although that is an Intrans. V.; 'to be tired'. If a Pass. f. of 2 a-r, 'to be tricked'. Türküी viii I 9, II 7 (alkin-).

D 2 aril- Hap. leg.; a mere jingle used only in the phr. aril sarîl- (see 1 sarîl-) and without a separate existence; apparently different from eril-, q.v.

Vu?D urunu: 'flag, standard'. Although it is common in the early period as an element in P.N.s, there is no early occurrence as a N., but see urunlûgûlê. The medieval words below are clearly related, and may even be intended to represent this actual word since in these texts gâyn is occasionally used to represent p. A 1-w. in Mong. as oraiqa, same meaning (Kov. 449, Hallad 83). In spite of this vocalization this word must surely be a contracted Conc. N. fr. urun- in the sense of 'something set up'. Cf. urunût. Türkü viii ff. the Miran MS. (ETY II 64 ff.) is full of P.N.s in which urunu: occurs 13 times (a) at the beginning of a name, e.g. urunu: toðûn (title) çiğü (title) A.3; (b) at the end e.g. küluq urunu: A.7; (c) in the middle, e.g. Kûre:bir (tribal name) urunu: saqû:n (title) Br.9; from the contexts it is clearly neither a title nor a tribal name: O. Kir. ix ff. (inscription starts) alp urunu: totok ben î am Alp Urunu: Totok (title) Mal. 16, 5; körtle: xan alp urunu: P.N. do. 10, 5; urunu: kütlük tok bûg: terkepe: (i.e. terken-ke?) 2 es- 'to stretch' esp. a rope, cord, and the like. Survives only (?) in NE Tuv. At some unknown date a verb es- 'to twist, twist together, tie' appeared, and some later user of the MS. of Kaś became so confused between the two that he altered the S which precedes this verb, 1 es- and 1, 2 us- to S and also this verb to es- and esl-; esl- 'to esl-, esl- 'to esl-, esl-'. The two verbs are however, clearly different, since Pal. 577 distinguishes between es-, Infin. ezer, 'to pull (meat off a bone, a pot off the fire)' and es-, Infin. ezer 'to twist'. The earliest references to (4) es- 'to twist', which s.i.a.m.l.g. are Xwar. xv Quth 61; Kom. xiv CCG; Gr.; and Çağ. xv ff. Vel. 60; San. 104v. 26. F os- 'to grow' a common Mong. verb (Haenisch 128, Kow. 514) which s.i.a.m.l.g. as a Mong. I.-w. and is earlier noted as below. In the only two passages in which it has been read in Uyg. viii ff. 'The only reason for doubting that this is a Mong. I.-w. arises in connection with PU őśür-, q.v.; if this is correctly read it might be a Caus. f. of őś-, but it is prob. an error. eş- Preliminary note. Kâs. gives two meanings
'to amble' and 'to pour (a dry substance)'; his meaning seems to belong to 1 aş-. In the medieval period two more meanings appeared,'to twist', which seems to represent a Sec. f. of 2 es-, q.v., and 'to dig, or row', which seems to belong to an old verb fortuitously not noted in the earlier period.

3 eş- 'to dig; to row (i.e. dig water)'; not recorded before the medieval period, but no doubt existed earlier. S.i.a.m.l.g. for 'to row' except in SW and for 'to dig' only in NE Tuv. and SW Osm.; in the latter it connotes less vigorous digging than kazar. Çag., xv ff. eş. VU?D Işı: 'lady', the feminine counterpart of bez; the Sing. occurs only in Uyg. and apparently only in association with bez; iṣler, which is said by Kaş, to be an abbreviated Plur., survived rather longer. It may well be that the Sing. f. is ışı with a Poss. Suff. 'his consort', and that the Plur. is merely a honorific Plur. of that word, but if so it is odd that Kaş did not suggest this. 2 is (iS?): 'to be blackened with smoke'. Similar difficulties and confusions arise in regard to the vocalization and survival of this word as in the case of 2 is, but broadly speaking it survives in the same languages and with the same phonetic changes. In Kas. the position is further complicated by the fact that this verb, which probably had back vowels, and 1 iSlen-, which almost certainly had front vowels, are treated in a single para., with the result that the Infün, is shown as -mak altered to -mek or vice versa. In addition a later scribe familiar with modern forms of this verb like Osm. iSlen- altered the 3-s to
-s-s. Xak. xo ev (VU) 1:iSlandu: laziqal-

D oyma: Pass. Dev. N./A. fr. o:y-;; s.i.m.l.g. usually meaning 'engraved or decorated work'.
This seems to be the word used in a cryptic para. in IrkB about gambling. As in many Turkish games, the play consisted in putting pebbles or counters in 'holes' (I o:y in this para.) and oyma: er, which obviously means 'a gambler', might mean literally 'a man who makes holes for the game'. Türkü viii ff.
IrkB 29 (ur-).

PUD uyur this word has been read in two O. Kir. ix ff. and one Türkü viii ff. Yen. inscription, Mal. 10, 17, and 28; for the text of the last see E inilgü. 'This last passage and Mal. 10, 2 yüz er kadašım uyarin üçün stand together; in both uyar could be an Aor. of uz- used as a Noun to mean 'ability'; because of the ability of my hundred kins- men' and, in 28, 4 'because of the ability of my elder and younger brothers', but in that case the word might well be uyur, q.v. This explanation does not suit Mal. 17 where the word has been read three times uyar ka-dınım üçün 17, 2; uyar begun: . . . uyar kadašmakı: 17, 3; this text is a very unsatisfactory one, and it would not be too difficult, epigraphically speaking, to correct the word to öz; 'for the sake of my own relations by marriage'; (I have been parted from) my own beg . . . and my own kinsmen'; Talas ix ff. (?) Talas II 5 (see ızza:).

D uyur presumably Aor. of uz- used as a Noun; 'capable, powerful', and the like, cf. uğan and see uyur. Türkü viii ff. Man. the word has been restored in elig beleş [uyu]larınñ of the king, beşg and powerful men' Wind. 31: (Xwar. xiv uyur in Qub 197 identified with this word looks more like a finite verb).

uyur some kind of small seed, 'millet' or the like. The Brahmi (TT VIII) spelling uyuri would normally be read úr or uyuri but is the only convenient way of writing uyüri in this alphabet. In the Uyğ. script the word is sometimes spelt uyür, sometimes uyur and sometimes uyur, før uyu(ı):r. The Xak. form uyur is unexpected and prob. represents the same word in a different dialect. There is disagreement about the meaning of kara uyuri: Moller in a note in Pfahl, 14 says that in an unpublished text (T III 66-4) it corresponds to Chinese su mo 'Perilla ocyoides' (Giles 10,320 7,969), and v. G. in a note in TT VIII 68 that in Swv. 476, 12 it corresponds to Chinese chieh tzu 'mustard seed' (Giles 1,255 11,317). N.o.a.b. Uyğ. viii ff. VÜ?C or S özek Kaş.’s explanation is possible, but it is perhaps a Sec. f. of I özek, with the vocalization altered to suit the etymology. Çigîl xi özek qalqab li’-nîşî ‘a Proper Name for women'; hence one says altn özök naqiyatu-l-nafs kal’-dahabî-l-xâliq ‘with a soul as pure as pure gold', and ertini: özek safîyatü-l-badan kal’-durra ‘with a soul as pure as a pearl'; because the peerless pearl is called ertzinî; and is contracted (sic, see ertzini); this Proper Name is used of Çigîl women; its origin is öz al-nafs and the kâf i.e. -ök) attached to a word to mean 'precisely that thing'; hence one says ol emîl ök keldür 'bring that man (and not someone else)'; with words with back vowels and those containing qâf or qayn ök is used instead Kaş. I 71; a.o. I 141 (ertini)!

D ızük Pass. N./A.S. fr. ız-; 'broken, torn off', and the like. It is not clear whether the entry in Kaş. is correctly placed here, or whether it should be transcribed ızök and regarded as a Sec. f. of 2 ozek. In a number of medieval and modern languages ızük is a Sec. f. of yüzük, q.v., and the word in Kaş relating to a tent may belong here. Türki viii ff. INITIAL LABIAL PLOSVES

Preliminary note. The initial labial sounds in the Turkish languages were discussed at length in a paper of that name (Studies, p. xvii) and the conclusions there reached are summarized in Studies, pp. 171-2. Briefly they are as follows: (1) there were originally in pre-VII Turkish both voiced and unvoiced initial labial plosives, b- and p-, but the latter had disappeared nearly everywhere by VIII, and is now found only in a few words in some languages in the Oğuz group, which was unusually conservative in some matters; (2) contrary to this tendency, some Oğuz languages converted the initial b- in three words bar-, bar-, and bér-, and words derived from them into v- at an early date; (3) m- was not an initial sound in native Turkish words in pre-VII Turkish, but evolved by a process of retrogressive assimilation in most languages, probably during VIII, in words containing a nasal sound later in the word. In this case, too, the Oğuz languages were conservative and retained the original b-, which is also found sporadically in Türkî VIII, and VII ff. Yen., and in Uyg. VIII, Șu. only. Where the later nasal was n or ñ the position is quite clear, 't' is ben in the languages just mentioned and men elsewhere. But where the nasal was ñ the position is confused by the fact that in most words this ñ had become y before the word comes to our notice. Exceptionally we can be sure that 'dung' was *bañák because, in addition to the Uyg., Xak., etc. form mayak, Kaš. records an Oğuz form baynak, but in the case of a word like myûgak the original form *buñgak can only be inferred.

In the present section all words are indexed with initial b-; where there is evidence from the Oğuz languages that it was originally p-, (p-), or in doubtful cases (p-), is added after the word. Where a word containing a nasal is noted only with initial m-, it is indexed in that form, but the original form with initial *b- is listed here with a cross-reference, but where the original b-survives somewhere, even if only in a modern language it is indexed in that form.

bat Preliminary note. There is no doubt about the existence of an Adv. bat ( ?pat) which was originally a pure onomatopoetic (see Kaş.), and came to mean 'quickly' and the like. There is no reason to doubt the authenticity of a second bat noted in Kaş., and prob. surviving in NC Kir. Finally there are two or perhaps three early occurrences of what seems to be a different word which may survive in NE Tur.

1 bat ( ?pat) originally an onomatopoetic for the sound of a falling object hitting the ground, but normally used as an onomatopoetic meaning 'quickly, hurriedly'. Survives in NE Tur. pat 'extremely' (e.g. tired) Pal. 328; SE Türkî pat 'quickly, soon' Shaw, BŞ. Jarring; NC Kir. bat ditto; SC Uzab. bot ditto; SW Osm. pat ditto, and onomatopoetic. Uyûg. viii ff. Civ. (the child) bat tîşîr 'is soon born' H I 23; bat eðğöl bûlur 'he quickly recovers dover' 28; o.o. TT VII 28, 28 (ogul-); 28, 37: Xak. xì one says bat kel, like the expression (VÜ) šap kel in telling (someone) to hurry (bi'l-îsârî); and for the sound (li-savût) of anything light which falls bat tûşîl: ('it fell with a plop') Kaş. I 319: Çağ. xv ff. bat zûd tea sarti 'quick, quickly (quoto.); bat bat zûd Zan. 119v. 13: Xwar. xii bat 'quickly' 'Ali 47.

2 bat perhaps survives in NE Kir. bat 'glue, paste'. Xak. xì bat al-farîr 'the thick juice of pressed dates' Kaş. I 319.

3 bat the first two quots. below come fr. inscriptions of which the text is very dubious, but if rightly read may survive in NE Tur. pat 'worthless, insignificant' Pal. 328; the third quot. may have 1 bat in an unusual meaning. Türkî viii (gap) yavîz bat biz azîz ükübügî kortîr [er[sig]]tî: sülê[i]m 'we are in a bad way and worth very little; you have seen how few (we are) and how many (they are); let us take the field bravely' Omgîn 7: Ö. Kir. ix ff. (gap) bat ermiš öldim 'I was worthless and died Mal. 10, 11; Uyûg. viii ff. Bud. (if a man has offended the bêgs and they contemplate killing or torturing him, their swords and saws(?) and whips break into small pieces and) neq bat kilo umaz 'they cannot do him harm(?)' Kwan. 27.

bêt 'the (human) face'. Rare in the early period being syn. v. 2 yîçz but survives with this and extended meanings, 'cheek, the surface of water', etc., as bèt/bet in NC Kir, Kzx.; SC Uzb.; several NW languages and in SW Osm. in the phr. bet bênz 'completion'. Uyûg. viii ff. Bud. (tantric) bir yeğîrîncî isak(?) atîq uzîk ol (bêt ûzî ol) 'the eleventh is the letter called isak (?) one should put it on one's face' TT VII 41, 2-5: Çağ. xv ff. bet rî wa 'ariçî 'face', cheek' Sun. 119v. 19.

bit originally 'louse', but also used for 'bug' and other parasites, including those on stored products. S.i.a.m.l.g. Uyûg. viii ff. Man.-A tonnuq bîtî 'body (lit. clothes) louse' M I 8, 14: Xak. xì bit al-qamîl 'louse'; and the worm (al-dîid) which attacks wheat is called tarîq bîtî: Kaş. 1 boţ prob. originally 'stature, the size of a man; but from the earliest period it also clearly means 'a clan', the Sing. of boðun, q.v.; the meaning underlying the latter is perhaps 'lineage' that is the size of a clan as a number of natural families. S.i.a.m.l.g.; in NE bot/pot/poz/poy, elsewhere usually boy, usually 'stature', but in NE 'self'; the meaning 'clan' is rare, but survives in SW Osm. See Doerfer II 812. E 3 bod 'bustard' follows 1 bod in Kaş. III 121; it is an obvious error for tqod, q.v.; the following entry bod munçuk presumably contains a similar error.

1 but (bud) properly 'the thigh'; sometimes more generally 'the leg', 'the hind legs (of an animal)', and the like. The original -d, which could in any case be inferred fr. the long vowel, survives in SW Az. bud and the oblique cases (budu, etc.) in Osm. and the long vowel in Tkm. but. S.i.a.m.l.g.; cf. uduluk. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. but köürmezẹ tiňlıq oğlanın 'for the sons of men who walk on their legs' TT VII 40, 141–2 is thus transcribed in the text, but the word is more likely to be bod 'having a bodily form': Civ. kolin butun sizlatur 'it makes his arms and legs ache' TT VII 25, 2; kayu kişi[n]i kolı butu bași yomğı tepreser 'if a man's (arms), legs, and head all twitch' do. 34, 2–3. F 2 but the normal rendering of 'Buddha' in Uyğ. Bud. is burxan, but but, prob. a l.-w. fr. the Chinese rendering of Buddha, fo (Giles 3,589; Ancient Chinese b'jūt in Karlgen's Grammata Serica, No. 500 l.) occurs in namo but the Chinese rendering of the Sanskrit formula namo Buddhāya 'homage to the Buddha in TT IV 14, 69; VII 40, 3 etc. But in the passages below is more likely to be a l.-w. fr. Pe. than Chinese direct, but the Pe. word itself is likely to be a l.-w. for Chinese prob. through Sogdian, dating from the time when there were Buddhist temples in the Sogdian-speaking areas. Cfr. burxan. See Doerfer II 716. (XaK.) xını (?). At. öz elgin but étip idim bu têdi 'making an idol with his own hands he said 'this is my lord'' 124; Tef. but/but burxan 'idol' (also but xana 'idol temple') 112: Xwar. xiv but 'idol' Qub 38.

VU 3 but (ʔbud) pec. to Kaş.; the meaning common to his two translations seems to something like a valuable object'. XaK. xi but the word for any large and precious turquoise (javrubacı) hung on the forelocks (al-nawasi) of the sons and daughters of nobles; hence one says kox but urdu (MS. tüzdü, but wada'tar requires urdu:) waq'a-atı'l-cerıyа daliha 'the servant maid put on that object' (presumably on the child, not herself); but the word for the provision (mira) made for anyone who brings a gift or present from a noble; for example if one man gives a horse to another, the groom is given a dinār or a sheep, and such a sheep is called but: Kaṣ. 112.

VU bōḍh 'a royal throne'; N.o.a.b. In I S 1 the first passage quoted appears as bu ōḍke: olurttum, but this seems to have been an error and is changed in II N 2, the later inscription. Türkü vīś (I Tēng: teg Tēngtide: bolūmī Türkü Bilge: Xuğan) bōḍke: olurtum 'they have taken my seat on the throne' II N 1 (I S 1 'at this time', see above); bōḍke: ńūmūl orlip 'I myself, sitting on the throne' II E 2; bōḍke: kūrūmghe begler-gū yapıltacısız 'will you begs, when you look to the throne, misbehave?' bût: (bû:to) 'camel colt, usually under a year old'; see Shcherbak, p. 106. An early l.-w. (with Mong. suffix) in Mong. as botebân (Haensch 20, Kow. 1181). PU? F bütün-ge: this seems to be the only Turkish word for 'egg-plant' which is not certainly a l.-w. All modern Turkish languages use some form of the Pe. word, sometimes in its form as a l.-w. in Russian baklazh, except SE Türki which has ceyze a corruption of Chinese chia-tsu. This suggests that this word, too, is a l.-w., prob. Iranian. The use of bütta in the translation in San. suggests that the author held this view. D boðun Plur, or Collective f. (? ) of 1 boð, cf. eren; lit. 'clans', in practice a semitechnical term for 'an organized tribal community, a people', in the sense of a community ruled by a particular ruler; hence, esp. in such phr. as kara: boðun, 'the common people' in antithesis to the supreme ruler, and the subordinate tribal or clan rulers, the bëgs. Very common in the early part but n.o.a.b. Kaş. mentions a form boynun as current in languages in which -d- had become -y-, but there is no record of the word in this sense, although it is common meaning 'neck'. Türkü vii boðun is perhaps the commonest word in the inscriptions; it occurs (1) by itself; (2) in the expression used by a ruler boðunum 'my people'; (3) preceded by an ethnic name, which may be either Turkish or foreign, e.g. Türkü boðun 'the Turkish people'; Tayğaç boðun 'the Chinese people' (practically equivalent to 'the Chinese Empire') IŞ. 4, 5 etc.; Soğdak boðun 'the Sogdian people' E 39; (3) and (3) both occur in tokuz oğuz boðun oğuz kentü: boðunum erti: 'the Tokküz Oğuz people were my own (subject) people' I N 4. The later meaning occurs in kara: boðun 'the common people' III E 41 and Türkü kara: kamag boðun 'all the Türkü common people' I E 8-9, II E 8, and is even clearer in I E 6, II E 6 (uçûn): viii ff. PUF butar Háy. leg.; this is the first entry in the section headed -R and precedes badar; the first letter is undotted but must be bû and carries a āamma, the second has two faint dots and is unvocalized; this section is not free from scribal errors (see badar) and judging by the meaning, it is likely that Kaš. actually wrote papur. Xak. xî butar jâtu'l-bordî 'the papyrus reed' Kaš. I 360.

PU?F batrak 'flag, banner, standard'. First occurs in Uyg. as part of the panoply of demons in association with various l.-w.s of Sanskrit origin and probably itself a similar l.-w., possibly received through Sogdian. It has no obvious Turkish etymology, and its phonetic history is obscure. The Uyg. alphabet is too ambiguous (b/p, d/dj/t) to make its Uyg. pronunciation certain; the second vowel was rounded but this is unparalleled elsewhere. The Xak. spelling was certainly batrak, the main entry preceding that of bûçak; it was originally the same elsewhere, but some later user of the MS. added two dots below the tâ, and this caused the spelling bayrak in the printed edition. By Çağ. the word had in fact become bayrak and this is the form in all modern SE, SC, NW, and SW languages in which the word survives; there must therefore have been, subsequent to Xak., an evolution batrak > badrak > ba'drak > bayrak, the intermediate stages of which are lost. See Doerfer II 727, 824. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. (the demons holding in their hands) trzul (PU) batruk 'tridents (Sanskrit triśula) and flags' U IV 8, 9; trzul (PU) batruk vîrîgîk tokîmak 'tridents, flags, thunderbolt (wajra) maces' do. 8, 39–40; trzul (PU) batruk âkrin bindipal 'tridents, flags, wheels (cakra), and lances (bhîndîpala) do. 20, 236–7; Xak. xi batruk 'a lance (mârada) with a piece of silk at its head which a champion uses as a badge (yatâsawam) on the day of battle' Kaš. VUD bo'drak Háy. leg. in a rather well-preserved inscription. Mal. identifies this with a Çağ. word botrak (P. de C. 161, not in San.) 'scattered', but this is impossible since that word is der. fr. botra- which is not Turkish but a corruption of Mong. bûteere-(Kow. 1231, Haldot 309). Perhaps der. fr. I bodû; but -rak is normally attached to Adj. not Nouns. O. Kır. ix ff. (I have been parted) büg bo'drak yuntum sizime: 'you, my thousand sturdy(s?) horses' Mal. 45, 8.

F badram 'merriment' and the like, hence 'a feast'. No doubt an Iranian l.-w., cf. Pe. badram 'a delightsome place' (Steingass). S.i.a.m.i.g. except NE as bayram (in NC Kr. mayram; Kx. méyram) as the Turkish equivalent of Arabic al-id'a (Moslem) feast'. See Doerfer II 823. Xak. xi badram al-turür wa-l-dhabhun 'ayna'l-ğamam 'general merriment and laughter', and the ground (al-ard) when it is covered with flowers and blossoms, is called badram yér arq nasiba 'pleasant ground'; I do not know what its origin (aššluhu) is because I have heard it from the lips of Persians (al-furs), but the Oğuz call the (the Moslem) feast day (yawma'l- i'd) bayram that is 'a day of pleasant merriment'; the -d- being changed to -y- as is their custom; it is a genuine word (luğ maḥda, i.e. pure Turkish?) in this sense Kas. I 484; a.o. I 263, 11 (avni-); xii(?) Tef. bayram 'religious feast' 8g: Çağ. xv ff. bayram al-ı'd San. 128r. 7 (quotn.; also 'a kind of cotton fabric like 'Irğçi linen but finer' (quotn.); there is no other trace of this meaning): Oğuz x1 bayram al-ı'd; I reckon that it is an alteration of the popular word (qawulul-nās) badram meaning 'merriment and enjoyment'; the (Moslem) feast day is a day of merriment. The pagans do not have a feast day or consequently a word for it; if there was one, all the Turks would know it, but the only ones who know this (word in this sense) are those who have turned -d- into -y- in their language Kas. PUD buturâğak: Dev. N. in -gûşk (connoting habitual action); there is no verb butur- and this would be much more easily explained as tuturâğak: der. fr. tutur- but R IV 1857 records a NC Tara word buturâğak 'a tree which has split and is bound round to save it from collapse', so the form may be correct although Radloff's Tara entries are rather suspect. Xak. xi buturâğak 'a thorn tree (gavuk) shaped like a pistachio tree (al-fustujq), which has thorns (ma'dallîq) which catch the clothing, etc. Kaş I 502.

(PUD budursîn: 'quail, Coturnix'; as such Hat. leg., but obviously connected with the later words for 'quail' assembled below. Kaş does not contemplate the existence of Turkish words containing six consonants and a long vowel, and it is possible that the original form was *buldurîsîn, which links with the later forms and perhaps explains the intervocalic -d-, very rare in Xak.; -sîn is a very rare Suff. but may have the same relation to -sîn, which occurs as a Suff. of other names of birds, as -sîl to -çîl. The later form survives in SW Az. bîldirîcin; Osm. bîldirîcin, but all other modern languages use some form of Mong. bûdîn (Kow. 1230, Haldôd 312). Xak. xi 'bîldirîcin: al-salwî 'quail' Kaş I 513 (verse 'çâkînîl'); translated al-sammandîn 'quail': (Çâg. xv ff. kerek (spelt; otherwise unknown) 'a bird smaller than a grey partridge', called salwî in Ar. and bûdîrcên in 'Turkish' Sam. 300r. 28; n.m.e. (F) bağa'tur: by origin almost certainly a Hunnish (Hsiung-nu) Proper Name, and more specifically that of the second Hsiung-nu shan-yü (209-174 n.c.) whose name was transcribed by the Chinese as Mão-tun (Giles 7,699 12,221; Old Chinese prob. something like maŋ-tun). The word occurs only once in the early period and then still as a P.n., but was an early l.-w. in Mong. as ba’atur (Haenisch 11)/bağatür (Kow. 1058), primarily as an element in P.n.s. e.g. Yezui Bą-atür (Haenisch 184) but also as a common noun meaning ‘picked warrior’. It is prob. that the transition from name to noun took place in Mong.; Turkish had other words like alpağut with this meaning. The word reappears in Turkish in the medieval period generally in forms with medial -h- which suggest that the immediate source was Pe. S.i.s.m.i. in SE, NC, SC, and NW as batyr/batur, R IV 1511-15, which seem to be direct borrowings fr. Mong. See Doerfer II 817 and Studies, p. 19. VU buğrîq, boğrul Preliminary note. Although these words are vocalized differently in the MS. the translations make it clear that they are etymologically connected and the most probable explanation is that they are Dev. N.s fr. boğur-, Caus. f. of boğ, which survives only in NE Sag. poğur- R IV 1266. A general connotation of 'throttling' is therefore indicated, but the precise meaning in this context of al-amîn, which has several meanings, is obscure; possibly 'a bulge' (in the sense of something produced by excessive pressure) or 'overfilling'. It is not easy to connect the second meaning of boğrul with the first, semantically it is easier to connect with boğrul, q.v.

VUD boğrûq Hag. leg.; see above. Xak. XI boğrûq (MS. bigrîq) al-amîn fi'l-girâra wa'll-teâb wa nahâwîh 'a bulge(?)' in a sack, milkskin, or the like' Kaş. 1461.

VU buğurâ:- the relationship between the two forms of this verb is morphologically obscure; both are n.o.a.b., but the first seems to be an earlier form of NW Kaş. bura- 'to fashion (logs); to build (a house) out of fashioned logs'. They have no connection with buğrâ:gu,: Xak. XI ol yîgaçç buğrâ:di: hazzâl-xasâb 'he carved, cut incisions or dovetails, in the wood' (etc.) Kaş. VU bukur:- Hag. leg.; this is prob. the correct form of the preceding verb, the -t- in the Perf. seems to be a scribal error caused by the form of the preceding verb. Xak. F beğ originally 'the head of a clan, or tribe, a subordinate chief', and the like. C.i.a.p.a.l. from the earliest period, but almost certainly a 1.-w. fr. Chinese po 'the head of a hundred men' (Giles 9,358; 'Ancient Chinese' (Karlgren 'po'). Survives with some phonetic changes (b/-p-; e/-é/-; -ğ/-y) and alterations in meaning parallel to the alterations in social structure; e.g. in the Ottoman Empire it came to mean 'a junior administrative officer' and finally hardly more than a complimentary title given to members of the gentry. See Doerfer II 818, 828. Türkü viii beğ is very common; the Türkü 'realm' (êl) consisted of the xoğan and his ministers and officials, beğler 'the beg's' (one of the very rare uses of the Plur. Suff. in Türkü) and bodun, 'the tribes, clans, common people'; in the opening address in I S 1-2; II N 1-2 the xoğan's own family, bodunim, various kinds of beğs and finally Tok(k)uz Oğuz beğleri: bodun: are addressed: viii ff. beğ is common in İrkB, e.g. in 5 beğ er 'a chief' went to inspect his studies: Yen. beğ occurs several times as the title of the person commemorated: Uyğ. vii beğ and beğler occur several times:

bög- 'to collect, gather together (people or things) and in particular 'to collect, or dam up (running water)'. Survives in NC Kir. bögö-; KX. bögö- 'to dam up (water); to block (a road)' and SW xx Anat. bögê/ böye-/büge 'to dam up' SDD 224-8, 237.

The verb seems to have become böge- in the medieval period; see bögül-, böğun-. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. türe böge 'rolling up and gathering together' (all my sins) Surw. 137, 4: Xak. xi ol suvuq bögî; he collected (qarî) the water and gathered it together in a basin (sïr) that he had prepared for it'; and one says beg sülîn bögî: 'the beg assembled (cama'a) his army'; the volume (kåtra) of an army is commonly compared to water, for example one says siv akkt: 'the water flowed' (sâla) and sii: akkt: 'the army streamed out' (sâla) Kaş 11 19 (bögeur, bógmek); teţizni: kaygukin bögmès: al-bahr là yuskar bîl-sawraq 'you can dam the sea with a small boat' İ 100, 18.

1 bük- Kaş gives two meanings (1) 'to bend, bow', and the like (Intrans.); (2) 'to feel aversion, be revolted by (something Abl.)', but later usages and the Pass. f. bükül- show that it was a Trans. V. w. the Object sometimes understood. S.i.a.m.Ig., usually in the first sense but w. an Object stated. Exceptionally NC Kir. distinguishes between bük- 'to bend' and bökö- 'to feel aversion', but it is unlikely that this reflects a genuine original phonetic difference between two verbs with different meanings. Cf. yaklin. bökê: although Kaş says that the primary meaning was 'a big snake' and that it was used metaphor. of strong warriors the evidence points rather in the opposite direction. An early l.-w. in Mong. as bökô 'warrior, wrestler' (Haenisch 7); survives in this sense in NE pôkô several dialects R IV 1299; bökô Ruzko-alt. stowar' (s.v. silach); SE Tar. bûkê R IV 1603-4 and perhaps NC Kir. bûkô, but these may be borrowings fr. Mong. See Doerfer II 803.

bögü: (bögö): 'sage, wizard'; the word seems to connotes both wisdom and mysterious spiritual power. An early l.-w. in Mong. as bôe (Haenisch 16)/bögê (Kow. 1242, Haldot 397) where it means 'a male shaman', as opposed to iđûgan 'female shaman' (a purely Mong. word). DF beğilgî P.N./A. fr. beğ. DF beğilgî A.N. (sometimes used as Conc. N.) fr. beğ. These two words must be taken together since to a large extent they have the same meanings, and in most texts the scripts are too ambiguous to make it possible to determine which word is intended. The P.N./A. usually means 'having the rank, or status of beğ', less often it means 'having a chief, or a husband'. The A.N. originally meant 'the rank or status of beğ', or 'fit to hold such a rank'. Later it came to mean 'a district governed by a beğ'. Beğilgî now seems to be obsolete, but beğilgî with various phonetic changes (see beğ) s.i.a.m.l.g. except NE with some changes of meaning, e.g. in NC Kir bûlynîk is the normal word for 'a government' and SW Osm. beylîk often has that sense. Türkî viii tavâçag bodunka: beğilgî uri: kul boltî: (corrected in II to kîltî) 'they made your sons who were fit to be chiefs slaves to the Chinese people' I E 7, II E 7; similar phr. I E 24, II E 20: viii ff. nelük ölgê of beğilgî: 'what should it do? It is fit for a chief' IrbB 57 (see kangî): Yen. beğilgî kastî [kap] 'his family of chiefs' M'îr, 26, 9: Uyğ. viii ff. bol- originally ‘to become (something)’, implying a change of state, in contrast to er- ‘to be (something)’ with the contrary implication. From a fairly early date, however, bol- began to lose its distinctive character and verge, at any rate sometimes, towards ‘to be’, and when some tenses of er- became obsolete they were usually replaced by tenses of bol- (but see I tur-). C.i.a.p.a.l. For unknown reasons the term was elided in some Western languages at an early date, prob. through an intermediate form with ‘w-.’ Today ol- is the only form in SW Az., Osm. (but not Tkm.) and occurs sporadically elsewhere, but only under the influence of Osm.; otherwise the form is bol- with minor phonetic changes. Türkīvī bol- is common and always implies a change of state; e.g. (the xağan died and) bodun: kūsząn kul bolts: ‘his people became maidervants and slaves’ E 20, II E 17; it also occurs in the phr. yok bol- ‘to cease to exist’, e.g. türḵ bujun yok bolmazun: ‘may the Türk people not cease to exist’ I 11, II E 10: VIII fl. Baldir, etc. Preliminary note. Kaş. mentions five different words with these consensuses variously vocalized, of which the last two present no particular problems. The first is mentioned twice, the second twice, and the third three times followed by the sentence wa hâdîhîl-arba 'a bi-ışbâ'îl-bâ' and these four have back vowels'; the problem is which four? The first word seems to be identical with the well-known word belirt, there is no difficulty about the difference between -d- and -t-, cf. baldu; Kaş. baldu; the 'four' therefore which have back vowels seem to be the second word, the two mentions being taken as identical, and the three occurrences of the third. These two words therefore, which are pec. to Kaş., can be taken as baldur. There is another well-known word baldîr not mentioned by Kaş.

2 baldır 1ap. leg., but perhaps a mis-spelling or Sec. f. of bıldır, which seems to be connected semantically. Xak. xi baldır tariğ al-beltdır 'the junction of two or more roads or rivers'. An early l.-w. in Mong. as bätzir (HaaæŒich 14, Kow. 1116, the -t- implies -t- not -d-). Survives in NE several dialects běltir R IV 124; Khak. pilțir; Tûv. beldir.

bıldır 'last year'; Radloff's suggestion that it is a crisis of the purely modern phr. bir yl is, of course, preposterous. Survives in NE Alt., Tel. pilîtr R IV 1315; Khak. pilțir; NC Kir., Kzx. bıltur; SC bıltur NW Kav. bıltur; SW Az., Tkm. bıldır, Osm. bıldır. It is an open question whether SE Türkî bıldır/baldır, etc. Shave 45; BS 55; Farring 47 'before, formerly, earlier' is a survival of this word or 2 baldır but suggests that they may originally have been identical. parallel of the phr. eke baldız in Uyğ. directly parallel to ečî liñî suggests that it was also sometimes used in the sense of 'younger sister' even in Uyğ. Uyğ. vii fl. Bud. Şiv. 554, 15– ben the 1st Pers. Sing. Pron. 'I'. C.i.a.p.a.l. The vocalization is irregular, the Dat. having apparently always had back vowels. In the other cases the vowel was almost certainly -e-, but spellings with -e- are fairly common in some languages; it is possible that in some languages, as in the case of the, the vowel became -e- when the word was used as a Predicate. The word was originally ben, but except in the Oğuz dialects became men by assimilation at an early date; it is one of the criteria for differentiating between Türki vii ff. Yen., and O. Kir. Ben now survives only in SW Osm., in all other languages, including SW Az., Tkm., and it is now men. The original sound is preserved in Čev. ep/epě 'I Ash. bar: Ka'ş definition of this word as a Particle (harf) connoting existence, or presence in a particular place, and the opposite of yok, q.v., is very apt. It is in fact nearly always used as the predicate of a sentence, the subject being either stated or inferred. In this usage, therefore, it is of the nature of a Verb, but it cannot be conjugated and must be supplemented by an Aux. V., er- or the like, if a mood or tense form is required. Its use as a Noun meaning 'existence' or 'property' (the latter meaning uncertain, if authentic, an abbreviation of barım) is unusual. C.i.a.p.a.l.; one of the three basic words in which the initial has become v- in SW Az. and Osm. (but not Tkm.), cf. bar-, bér-. F bêre: a measure of length; n.o.a.b., but a l.-w. in Mong. asbere (Kou. 1126) where it is taken as equivalent to Sanskrit yojana 'a mile of 8,000 yards'. Obviously a l.-w., which, as it is certainly not Chinese and does not look Iranian, is prob. Tokharian. Phonetically the only suitable equivalent is B pêre; A pêra ‘an arrow', which if taken to mean 'a bow shot', which is a unit of length at any rate in Çağ. (see atîn), might have such a sense. This explanation is not, however, self-evident. Uyûg. vii ff. Man.-A yêtımû tûmen bêre süngî teg 'like a lance 700,000 bêre long' M I 20, 15-16: Bud. (on the bank of that river there is an iron tree) bir bêre eölz ‘one bêre high’ TM IV 253, 64; o.o. do. 129, 131; TT IX, p. 22, note 77, 5 tûmen bere in Hûen-ts. (unpublished fragment) translates Chinese 10,000 lî; a lî is about 600 metres.

?D bûru: (?bûrû) an Adv. used both of time and of space, meaning broadly 'to this side, on this side'. The phonetics of this word are obscure. So far as the first vowel is concerned the Türkî spellings of cognate words point more to -ê- than -e-, and there are sporadic spellings with -ê- later, but the evidence for -ê- is not conclusive. The word does not occur in Türkî vii (the word sometimes so read in T 26, 28 is evîrû) and the spellings of cognate forms in Türkî and Uyûg. are more easily derived fr. *ber (bêr) than this word. It is, therefore, prob. that bûru: is itself a der. f., a crasis of *bûrrû; that is *ber (bêr) with the Directional Suffix -rû; and this is corroborated by the fact that it is often used in antithesis to D barça: Equative f. of bar; 'all'. S.i.a.m.l.g.; in SW only Tkm. One of several words with this meaning, cf. tolp, kop, F kamağ, köp, etc. See Doerfer II 683. Türkü vııı ff. (and whatever evil blasphemies that wicked demon thought of) barça: [gap] 'all of them' Ṣev. III 1v.7 (ETY II 179): Uyğ. viii barça: Şu. Sa. (damaged passage): viii ff. Man.-A (after a list of gods) bular barça 'all these' M I 21, 3 (i); a.o. do. 6 (i): Man. işin barça kodur 'he puts down his work completely' M I 17, 2; (whatever things distress mankind) barça 'they all' (arise from anger and perversity) TT II 16, 46; olar barça kamıkun 'they all together' III 125; o.o. do. 75, 104: Chr. (whatever children are under two years old) barçanı örnekler 'kill them all' U I 10, 3: Bud. oların barça U III 28, 5; (giving all) barçasın bürür erdi 'he gave them all away' do. 40, 31; and many o.o.: Xak. barça: a Particle (harp) meaning al-kull 'all'; one says barça: kefdiler 'they all came' Kaş. VUD barça: Hap. leg.; Equative f. of 2 bör (?), which from the context must be something violent. V. Thomsen (Turcica 94, note 2) suggested that there was an old word bör meaning 'a storm', of which NE, NC bora - to be stormy' R IV (a.v.) 1662 was the Den. V.; and it has been suggested that SW Osm. bora 'a violent wind' is a later form. This is not wholly impossible, but it is more probable that Osm. bora is a corruption of Greek boreas 'north wind', and it is very odd that, if there really was a word bör meaning anything as ordinary as 'a storm', there should be no other trace of it. It is more likely that this is the Equative f. of 1 bör: 'wine' with the implication that too much wine leads to disorder. Türkü vii Türgeş xağan süsü: Boqlu: oça: barça: kelti: 'the Türgeş xagan's army advanced from Boqlu: like a fire or ...' T E 37; II 27.

Arat preferred to read yüüzli translating it 'two-faced', but the word would be Hap. leg. and this would not be the normal meaning of such a word).

?F barçın 'silk brocade'. N.o.a.b., but the standard word for 'silk' in Čuv. where it is spelt purçın, purçin, purçum, purçun, purçun, porçâm, purçân, porçên Ash. IX 309-10 (Cuv. -ç is a sound like -sy-). One of several words with this meaning; cf. ağič, eşğiçli, çılt, çıxansn; 2 çıkin, çız, tor-kû, kaçgar, kaçaç, kutay, xulip, loxtay, züngüm. The Turks did not manufacture silk brocade, and it is unlikely that there were many, if any, native words for it. Morphologically çıxansn, kutay, xulip, loxtay, and züngüm look Chinese. Esğiçli looks Tokharian, since š-, šk- are characteristic initials in that language. Barçın may be a l.-w. fr. Tokharian A pāşim ‘treasure’ (van Windekens, op. cit. s.v. bokurs; p. 88). For the use of the same word for ‘silk brocade’ and ‘treasure’ cf. ağič: Uyg. viii ff. N. fr. *birx- or *birx:- the only cognate word is birxir-, q.v., and there are the same morphological problems as in the case of burxî: q.v. NE Tuw. bûfî 'snort 'is presumably a corruption of this word. Xak. xî burxîg 'the snort (nasir) of a horse or donkey'; one says at burxîg: Kas. I 461.

D burxîx Hap. leg.; completely unvocalized and the b- undotted (but, being between burxîg and bâsalag, must be b-). See burxî: presumably Dev. N. fr. *burx-: Xak. xî burxîx inçedûl-eîl-çid wa gäyrihî 'a wrinkle in the skin, etc.' Kas. I 461.

E bârgan See bazgan.

D bârîxî (bârîxn) Dev. N./A. fr. bar-; the word is in a section of which the heading 'fülânîsîîîan variously vocalized', requires a long vowel in the Sulf., which seems to be unique but is presumably a Sec. f. of -xÎÎn. Pec. to Xak. Xak. xî bârîxn kîsi: a traveller (al-nacûl-l-musîfîr) whom nothing turns aside from his objective' Kas. I 440: KB (I treat all people alike, whether they are my son, or a neighbour, or stranger) kerek bûrîxî erse keçîgli konûk 'or a guest passing through and determined to push on' 817; kîsi bûrîxn 'a man who has travelled widely' 4326; a.o. 4727.

CF burxan compound of Chinese fu (Giles 3,589) and presumably xan. The Chinese character was the one chosen to transcribe Buddha, and was pronounced approximately bur in NW China in VII-VIII. This word, corresponding properly to some phr. like Buddharâjâ, was the one chosen to represent Buddha in the earliest Turkish translations of Buddhist scriptures, which must have antecedied the appearance of Manichaeism among the Turks, and was taken over by the Manichaean missionaries to translate words like 'prophet' applied e.g. to Mani himself. In the Moslem period, like 2 but, q.v. it came to mean 'idol' and still survives in one or two NE languages purkan R IV 1386; Tuw. burxan 'God' and in NC Kir. epics burxan 'idol'. See Doerfer II 732: Türkîî VIII ff. Man. burxan, usually in the Plur., is common in Chuas., e.g. teçprî yalavaçî burxanlar 'God's messengers, the burxans' 64-5, 60; 'the burxans and the pure Elect' 133; the god Zurrvan, the sun and moon gods, the mighty god and the burxans 173-5; teçprî Mani burxan M III 15, 7 (i): Uyğ. viii ff. VU borğu*y 'trumpet'; the phonetics are chaotic and it may well be a l.-w. Kaš. alone has final -y; Muh. may point to -o- and Kom. points to -u- in the first syllable, but it survives in some NE and NW languages as burg/parğı and in SW Az., Osm. as boru. See Doerfer II 735. Uyg. viii ff. berk 'firm, stable, solid'; the original form of the word which also appears as bek (q.v. Fr. an early date. An early l.-w. in Mong. as berke (Haensch 15) where it means rather 'difficult, severe', and the like. S.i.a.m.lg. except perhaps NE where Tuv. berge is a reborrowing fr. bürük ' Pass. Conc. N. fr. bür-. Survives in SE Türkî bürük 'pucker, gather' Shaw 48 (only). It is an open question whether bürük, 'a stuffed pancake,' is also a later form of the word. It has no other obvious etymology, and it is consistently spelt with -bür- in SC xin Xiva Vam. 246; several NW languages: SW Osrm., Tkm. Xak. xii bürük 'any circular draw-string (väst mutawwar) like that in the mouth of a leather food bag or the top of the trousers and the like Kaq. bürük: a whip'; an old word ending in -ge: It is suggested in TT IV, p. 18, note 47 that it is a L.-w. fr. Latin virga 'a rod, stick' obtained through Middle Pe, but there does not seem to be any trace of the word in Pe., and the theory is improbable. N.o.a.b., completely displaced by the syn. word kamçī, q.v. Cf. kağlı. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. temirl bürge 'an iron whip' TT V 10, 93; o.o. TT IV, 10, 7 (and see note thereto) etc. (bedük). PUD bürgje: Hap. leg.; spelt vergi in the MS. but its position between boğra (P.N.)

bürkär- (?p) -‘to spurt, gush’. Etymologically connected with bürkeč. Morphologically difficult; it is possible that this is an Intrans. Den. V. and bürkeč a Den. N. fr. *buruk (?p-) which might be an onomatopoeic for the sound of spurt. The modern forms mostly lack the final -r-. Survives in NE Alt., Tel. pürkü- pürkär- ‘to spurt’ RIV 1399; Khak. pürgür-; SE Türkü pürkü- BS; pürk- farring; NC Kür., Kzx. bürk-; SC Uzb. purka-; NW Kaz. bûrk-; KK, Kumyk bûrk-; Nag. bûrk-.. Dis. BRL

?D birle: 'with'; Gronbech in Der türkische Sprachbau, p. 35, describes this and üçün, üze; and tég as the four old Turkish Postposns. also used as Adv.; he analyses it as bir with 'emphatic' Particle -la; but there is no other trace of such a Particle. The word is obviously very old, and it seems more reasonable to analyse it as an abbreviated Ger. of a Den. V. fr. bir, birle:- which occurs as a V. meaning 'to unite' (Trans.) in Xwar. xii(? a.o.o. The -r- began to be elided at an early date, producing the f. bille, but in some modern languages this has been further abraded and words quite unlike the original have resulted; a long list of these forms will be found in N. F. Katanov, Opyt issledovaniya uryankhaiskogo yazyka, Kazan, 1933, p. 151. Broadly speaking in NE the word survives more or less unchanged as in Tuv. bille or grossly deformed as in Khak. minnan; in SE farring records birle/bile/vile/birlen/bileen/vilen; NC Kir. men/menen; Kzx. ben/pen/pen; SC Uzb. bilan; in NW all the forms found in NC as well as more conventional ones; SW Az., Osm. Ile; Tkm. bile/bilen. As a Postposn. birle: has much the same meanings (comitative, instrumental) as English 'with'. At some unknown date, but as early as Xak. it came to be used as an Adv. meaning 'even', and in Osm., while as a Postposn. it is Ile, as an Adv. it is still bille, see Deny, Grammaire de la langue turque, Paris, 1920, para. 437. Türkü viii birle: 'with' occurs in a simple comitative sense, e.g. eğim xağan birle: 'with my uncle the xağan' I E 17, II E 15, or with the indirect Obj. after verbs like 'to come to an agreement' I S 4, II N 3 (tüzül-) and suffixes ‘to fight’ IE 35; I N 1; viii ff. Man. sizni birle ‘with you’ (note that the Acc., which suggests that birle: was still regarded notionally as a V.) TT II 6, 11; o.o. Man.-A (however many physicians come) otun birle ‘with their drugs (Acc.)’ MI 15, 6–7; a.o.o. Bud. birle, and in late texts bile/bilen is very common both in a comitative and an instrumental sense e.g. men El-tüzümış birle: i and El-tüzümış TT IV 4, 15, etc.; and (bend the two index fingers and) ulug erguson uçu bilen terğur ‘touch them with the grip of the thumb’ TT V 8, 57; Civ. birle/birlen/bile/bilen all occur as Postposns. in both senses, e.g. erdemliğ birle ertini bile tüz erür ‘a virtuous man is comparable with a jewel’ TT VII 42, 1, and içkülü süti birle yuniar ‘if it is washed with goat’s milk’ do. 23, 11; in do. 28 yekezler birle[2] in 2, kizi bile in 5: Xak. xi birle: a Particle (harf) meaning ‘with’ (ma’); one says olun men birle: erdi: ‘he was with me’ (note Gen.); and the -r- is elided from it for the sake of lightness (li’-li’-li’-li’) and one says bile: Kaq. I 430; over 100 o.o. of birle: and nearly 40 of bile: all (?) as Postposns.: KB birle/bile (as the mere requires) are very common as Postposns.; bile ‘even’ (Advv.) 2722 (arsık-); xii(?)(?) PU bûskîk a word, like tûçûr, concerned with inter-clan marriage customs. In the end both words came to mean no more than 'a person who actually is, or properly could become, a relation by marriage', but in the Mong. translation of the same text as that translated in TT VI the phr. corresponding to tûçûr bûskîk in L. 308 is qûda anda which is explained as follows in San. 284r. 9, qûda is 'a tribe to which daughters are given in marriage' and anda (which also means more generally 'friend, companion') is 'a tribe from which daughters are taken in marriage'. If the parallel is exact bûskîk must originally have had the latter meaning. It also occurs in the phr. adaš bûskîk and bağîr bûskîk both meaning 'blood relations and relations by marriage'. This word is not mentioned in the useful summary of terms of relationship, L. A. Pokrovskaya, 'Termyni rodstva v tyruskikh yazykakh' in Istoricheskie razvitie leksiki tyurkshikh yazykov, Moscow, 1961. Pec. to Uyg. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. INITIAL DENTIPALATAL AFFRICATE

Preliminary note. Initial ş- is not very common in Turkish as an original initial. Although there is good evidence that both unvoiced ş and voiced ç existed in the medial and final positions, there is no evidence that there was ever a voiced initial ş—see Studies, pp. 167, 170. There are many Secondary initial ç-s, ç-s, and ş-s in some modern languages, usually representing an original y-, less often an original s- or t-, with some interchange between the three. Conversely in some languages ş- has become ç-. There are in Mong. and Per. a good many words with initial ç- which have become l-æs in Turkish and have erroneously been regarded as native Turkish words.

F çaw l.-w. fr. Chinese ch’îao ‘a paper currency note’ (Giles 514); appears as a unit of currency in late (xii-xiv) Ùyûğ. Civ. documents; also used in Çağ. since such notes were issued by the Mongols in their western dominions. N.o.a.b. Ùyûğ. viii ff. Civ. çaw is common in USp. and, like ch’ao, seems to mean sometimes an actual currency note and sometimes ‘expressed in notes and not coin’ (kûntû), e.g. 12, 5 altî yûz yastuk çaw ‘notes for (or a sum of) 600 yastûks’; 12, 6 bu çawni ‘this sum’; 15, 8 yêgîrîn yastuk çûn tup baw çaw ‘notes for twenty yastûks in heavy current copper coin’ (Chinese ch’unh t’ung pao, Giles 2880 12, 294 8,720); the word transcribed çiv in 54, 9 etc. is the same word: Çağ. xv ff. çaw ‘an oblong piece of paper which circulated instead of gold in the dominions of the Mongol xans with a special mark and the name of the padiyâh inscribed on it’. They conducted business with it. Wassâf in the second volume of his History in an account of the çaw which were current in the reign of Goayxâtû Xan says that the shape and appearance of the çaw were as follows: around the face of an oblong piece of paper were written a number of words in Chinese characters, and at the top ‘da ilâh illâ Allah, Muhammad rasûlullah, a metallic coin’ and below that was written imirîn nurî (a corrupt Mong. phr.) in an oval below the centre; they were in denominations from half a dirham to ten dinârs and have become obsolete San. 209v. 10.

Vu?F čava: Hap. leg.; prob. an Iranian l-w. cognate with Pe. čaván 'young'. Xak. xi čava: min âsmâl-î-fiyân 'a boy's name' Kaś. III 225.

Pu?F civi: Hap. leg.; the single kasa under the word might belong either to the c- or to the -v-; possibly an Iranian l-w. with an initial dental converted to an affricate, cf. Iranian dæva 'demon' (Pe. de). Xak. xi civi: 'the word for a class of demons' (lizhîl-l-cimm). The Turks assert that when two communities (em läyn) fight one another, before the battle the demons which inhabit the territories (wâlîya) of these two communities fight one another furiously on behalf of the human owners of the two territories; and whichever of them wins, the victory goes to the owner of that territory on the next day; and whichever of them is defeated on that night, defeat comes to the ruler of the community in the territory inhabited by that class of demons. On the night before the encounter (al-mâ-âd) the 'Turkish armies hide themselves and go into their tents to take cover from injuries by the arrows of these demons. This is well known (mârûf) among them Kaś. III 225.

Vu?F Uş čuv: Hap. leg.; a Khotanese word might be native Saka, the language of that area, or corrupt Turkish; as the Türkü order of precedence seems to have been xāqan- sad (and tégın) - yabana (q.v.) it is possible that this is a corruption of the last word. çavuş originally the principal military officer of a xâşân, 'army commander', and the like, the military counterpart of bilğe: As time went on the post gradually lost status; in the medieval period no standard translation is possible since the çavuş was at various times the principal escort of the sovereign, a member of the corps of royal sergeants-at-arms, and a police officer in government offices and provincial headquarters. Pe. word çepîş-çapuş and Shcherbak may be right in suggesting that this is an Iranian l.-w., since the Pe. word is cognate to Latin caper, Celtic kaper, while the word has no obvious Turkish etymology. Vu çeçi 'an iron nail'; as such Hap. leg., but there are several syn. modern words clearly derived fr. it; NC Kır. çeçi; Kzx. çeçi; SC Uzb. çeçi; NW Kaz., Krım, Kumyk çy; Kk. çeçi; SW Osm. çiv; Tkm. çy. These forms suggest that the vowel was originally ĕ-č. As regards the final, strictly 'non-Turkish', -ş this is more likely to be a Sec. sound than an indication of foreign origin. If so, it was probabil. dissimilated fr. -eč and the evolution may have been *çeč > çeţi > çeţv > çeţčuvi > çuvi. Xak. xi çeşi ('with -j') al-mismâr min'al-šhadîd 'an iron nail'; and a rivet on a breastplate (qatiru'l-dir) is called çeşi Kaş. III 123.

Mon. V. CC-
Vu çič- Hap. leg.; the -j is prob. a Sec. sound, see çeçi; the Infin. here has -mak, that of the Caus. f. -mek; it is not clear which is an error. As the word precedes çoj- the vowel should perhaps be fatha, see çičîrm. Xak. xi yaghîrîg at çîdîj ('with -j') 'the galled horse lay down' (inxafa) when someone wished to mount it, fearing for its back; and a galled animal does the same when someone wishes to put a load on it Kaş. II 9 (şçjær, çîjmak).

çöl- as such Hap. leg.; at any rate in later times practically syn. w. şeq-, q.v., which makes it difficult to separate modern forms of the two words, but this one at any rate survives in SW Az., Osm., Tkm. çöz- 'to untie, unravel'. The -ş is no doubt a Sec. sound, perhaps dissimilated fr. -ç, cf. çeçi, in which case the original form may have been *çečč. Xak. xi uraçat yip çödîj ('with -j') 'the woman pulled on (cadabat) the thread'; also used of anything that can be stretched (yumkin titilâtuhu) by pulling, like a cord or a sheep's entrails Kaş. Çak. xv ff. çöz- 'az ham darburdan wa az ham vàd kardan vá paraganda kardan 'to take off, pull off, disperse' Sâm. 212 v. 27: Xwâr. xiv çöz- 'to loosen, untie' Qûtib 44: Kom. xiv çöz- 'to pull' CCG; Gr. VUD çîtûr- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of çîl- (sic), q.v. As this word precedes çîtûr- the vowel should perhaps be fatha.
